It will seat 1,000, and is scheduled to open September 1.

Hays Reviews Arbitration

did not know whether they might result in five million or six million dollars' worth of completed transactions. With rare good luck, he might hope for seven million out of his promised ten.

"Because of this uncertainty, two mutually destructive hardships grew in burden each year. The theatre owner had to post an advance, usually of twenty-five per cent, when he ordered his films. This hurt the small exhibitor, and hurt him badly. The producer, on his end, had to start manufacture of the year's product on this advance, and then had to borrow the rest of his needed capital from sources which charged him from twelve to fifteen per cent. Responsible banking sources hesitated to take risks which threatened to make the production and sale of motion pictures permanently a wildcat operation.

10,500,000 Showings Per Year

"When it is realized that the average motion picture theatre annually rents from distributors approximately 175 feature pictures and about 350 short subjects (newsreels, comedies and novelties), it will be seen that the approximately twenty thousand theatres enter into contracts with distributors calling for 10,500,000 separate exhibitions of pictures every year. This enormous number of transactions is under written contract and the opportunities for disputes arising therefrom can be readily visualized. Every delivery of every picture in every theatre was a potential lawsuit. In 1922, distributors and exhibitors alike were staggering under an actuality of 4,000 suits, with the indicator rising.

Lawsuits Disastrous

"These lawsuits were disastrous to the winner and loser.

"No matter who won or lost the suit, the value of the picture in question would have faded out long before the award. Bad feelings, bad collections, drags of every kind on the progress of the industry made our situation intolerable.

"We then worked out a system which we have since steadily tried to improve. Our latest form of uniform contract, agreed upon May 1, 1928, is better than the first, instituted in 1923.

"In 1922, the year before arbitration began in virtually its present form, the industry had approximately 4,000 lawsuits over contracts.

"In the four years of arbitration, the boards have disposed of 50,006 contractual disputes, involving $11,200,298.94.

Exhibitors Upheld 52 Per Cent

"In 1927 alone, 14,346 cases, involving $3,825,636.76, were amicably adjusted. Of the total number of claims filed by theatre owners against distributors, the theatre owners were upheld in fifty-two per cent. Of the total number of claims filed by distributors, only forty-one per cent were upheld. Only thirty-six cases required the seventh arbitrator. Nine court entries were made to enforce compliance with awards, and there were fifty-three court entries of judgments under awards. Five cases only found their way into court before, arbitration.

"Here is another pertinent fact: Out of the 14,356 claims in 1927 disposed of 4,671 were settled before the date of hearing and 2,368 were withdrawn. When two parties to a dispute know that men of their own acquaintance and profession, having a full background of existing conditions, will be their judge and jury, they examine their own presentations with a careful eye.

"We have had some difficulties, of course. We will continue to have some. Every now and then some man, who wanted an advantage and got a judgment instead, becomes vocal in the press. These cases make headlines, but they are hardly chips in the steadily flowing stream of success."

Alan Crosland Signed by Columbia

ONE of Columbia's ten specials for the 1928-29 season will be directed by Alan Crosland, just signed by Columbia. The director has, in the past two years, worked on special productions for Warner Bros. The name of the Columbia production he will direct and its starring player will be announced shortly.

J. D. Williams Forming New Organization

that we can make as good pictures on the other side as are made over here it is going to have a tremendous effect on motion pictures. It is going to bring about a more friendly spirit in the picture industry of the world, and as a consequence it is going to cut down many of the restrictive measures in the different countries as well as negative costs of pictures. Principally, it will create international competition, and there is nothing better for any industry than competition.

"By giving the exhibitors a free selection of pictures it will have a decided tendency to eliminate poor pictures and thus put a curb on over-production. This will mean more money for the better pictures and stars. The selection of pictures from all parts of the world will stimulate public interest and increase attendance in America.

"We are going to attempt to release none but the best of foreign-made pictures in America. In many cases they will be made-to-order pictures. We will advance to the producers the idea for a story, and suggest to them how it should be handled, and we think this will bring about good results. We will bring over good directors and good actors.

"I figure that with proper competition for Hollywood, and with a reduction of the number of features now produced to only worth-while pictures, foreign business for American producers will develop from 25 per cent to 50 per cent in every country in the world.

"Producing units releasing through World-Wide Pictures will form associations in their respective countries similar to the Hays organization in America. These associations will serve to combat adverse legislation and will want American productions admitted free in their respective countries in return for the revenue they will receive from the American market.

"The activities of World-Wide Pictures abroad will develop the motion picture business in many foreign countries, and the increased revenue to the big American companies in those countries will more than offset any loss of revenue in the American market.

"In order for the motion picture business to make the same rapid progress it has made in the past a great many of the foregoing plans must be brought into effect before the industry can rightfully claim to be a world-wide institution."

William Quigley President M. P. T. O. of Pa.

William Quigley, of Nanticoke, Pa., now occupies the chair of president of the M. P. T. O. of Northeastern Pennsylvania, having succeeded M. E. Comerford, head of the Comerford chain of theatres, at a meeting of the exhibitor unit held at the Hotel Casey in Scranton on May 27. At that time, Harry Spiegel, manager of the Academy Theatre, Scranton, assumed his duties as new secretary of the Northeastern Pennsylvania body.

Addresses were delivered by R. F. Woodhull, national president of the M. P. T. O. A., Martin J. O'Toole, executive secretary and business manager of the M. P. T. O. A. and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the T. O. C. C., of New York. Mr. Woodhull termed the two obstacles impeding the progress of the motion picture industry as abuse of power and lack of vision. He predicted great developments for sound pictures.

At a dinner of the exhibitors held in connection with the convention, Mr. O'Toole was toastmaster. Present at this affair were William Roberts, of Plymouth, M. E., Comerford and Vincent J. Brennan, both of Scranton. The next session will, it is said, be held in Mauch Chunk on July 29.

Residential House Zoning Abandoned in Baltimore

According to a ruling made recently by the Film Board of Trade in Washington, D. C., of which J. S. Fitzgerald is secretary, the former zone system for residential houses in Baltimore has been abandoned for the booking of pictures.

Hereafter, it is said, any picture may be booked by any theatre in any part of Baltimore, according to the highest bid made, and no regulations as to zones have anything to do with picture selling.

Big British Combine Effected With 200 Theatres Involved

THE largest theatre combine ever attempted in Europe was the recent merger of 200 houses throughout Great Britain engineered by the British Gaumont, Ltd., and the General Theatre Corporation. It is said to command a capital of $40,000,000. The theatres in the combine are picture and vaudeville houses.

F. A. Szarvasy, chief stockholder in the General Theatre Corporation is associated with Sir Walter Gibbons, London theatrical magnate. The Gaumont Company controls a large number of motion picture houses in Great Britain. A. C. Bromhead is president of this organization.

Laemmle Warns Industry Against Skimping

Universal Chief Cautions Against False Economy and Urges Spending on Good Pictures

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, in a statement of some length, warns the industry against "skimping," and cautions against false economy. He sees prosperous times ahead for the picture industry, and believes that money spent in the right direction is bound to help matters.

The Laemmle statement, in part, follows:

"There are worse evils in the moving picture business than extravagance. One of them is skimping. There is no doubt in the world that every company has been more or less extravagant in years gone by. An effort was made last year to curb this extravagance. Because of certain signs and portents which I have noticed, I deem this an appropriate time to sound a note of warning to the entire industry. It is this: Skimping must not be mistaken for economy. The practice of economy is incumbent on every individual and on every company. The false economy is the worse course that any individual or any company can possibly pursue.

"In the making of pictures the producer owes a duty to exhibitors and to patrons of pictures. He owes it also to the authors and directors of his productions. The framework, the embellishment, the setting of his story, should be wholly adequate to the picture itself. A diamond must have a perfect setting in order to show off its true brilliance and value. More than that, the industry owes it to itself to go onward to better and better things. It must never take a step backward. We have achieved a certain standard in this business. We must constantly increase that standard, because more and more people are being educated to appreciate the better things in moving pictures. The standard must go forward as the appreciation of the audience advances.

Good Pictures Essential

"The life blood of our industry is good pictures. They are the most important thing in the world to us. They are the essentials. A splendid theatre is a fine thing to have; good pictures are better. A talented orchestra is good; it is of little avail without good pictures. Clear, unwavering projection is a splendid thing for your audience; but a good picture is far better. Favorable weather is much more apt to fill your theatre than rainy weather; but good pictures will fill your theatre—rain or shine.

"Good pictures we must have, and good pictures cost money. There is no getting away from that. Any skimping or false economy in picture making is not only a fatal error, but is a stab in the back to the entire industry.

"Please don't think that I want to encourage extravagance in picture making. We have seen enough of that. But I firmly believe that the picture business is entering upon a period of prosperity the like of which it has never experienced before. We must be ready for it. We must be prepared. We must have the equipment to take advantage of it. And this equipment is GOOD PICTURES. Let's insure our own prosperity with more good pictures this year than we have ever produced before in any year."

William Sistrom Gen'l Manager Pathe Studios

IN the post of general manager of the Pathe studios will be William Sistrom, who has been acting in a like capacity for the Cecil B. De Mille studios. Under his supervision, production for the 1928-29 program is already under way.

After working for Carl Laemmle and William Randolph Hearst's Cosmopolitan productions as production manager, he became general head of the Hollywood studios where the Christies and the Producers Distributing Corporation formerly made their productions. These studios eventually became the Metropolitan Studios, and with the affiliation of De Mille, Mr. Sistrom assumed managerial charge of both the Metropolitan and De Mille studios.

New Columbia Exchanges

Nationalization Plan Practically Completed with Six Additional Key City Offices Established

COLUMBIA PICTURES has practically completed its nationalization plan started two years ago when it acquired its first exchange. Jack Cohn, treasurer of the company now anonunces the completion of arrangements for the opening of exchanges in St. Louis, Milwaukee, Denver, Salt Lake City, Albany and Buffalo.

This latest deal was engineered by Jack Cohn and was entrusted for execution to Cecil E. Maberry, sales manager, who is now on a tour of the company's exchanges. The new branches give Columbia vantage points in Eastern Missouri, Southern Illinois, Wisconsin, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Western Nebraska, South Idaho and the state of New York outside of New York City.

In commenting on the expansion, Mr. Cohn said:

"The acquisition of these exchanges is practically the final step in the nationalization plan which Columbia started two years ago. Six branches were opened during the past year—one in Minneapolis and five on the West Coast and in the Northwest. Every weak link in the chain of distribution has now been eliminated and responsible offices have been established in all the important key cities of the country.

"The new branches will greatly advance our plans to coordinate production and distribution activities to such a point that we will be able to give the exhibitor greatly improved service.

"Several persons prominent in the distribution field are now being considered for the newly created positions of branch managers and for the sales force. Announcement of important appointments will be made shortly."

Mayer Removed from Sapiro Film Purchase Committee

ACCORDING to a statement issued by the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, Elias Mayer, of the firm of Mayer & Schneider, has been removed from the film purchase committee of the organization, by vote of the Board of Directors May 30. Harry Brandt was elected to fill the vacancy.

"At the same meeting President Sapiro was instructed and authorized by the Board of Directors to begin legal action against the Mayer & Schneider Theatres Corporation to collect money due the Association. This action was taken when it was reported to the Board that none of the Mayer & Schneider theatres have paid into the Association any of the sums due in the form of dues since they became members.

"It was reported to the Directors that the Mayer & Schneider theatres were the only absolute delinquents.

"While Mr. Mayer was removed from the Film Purchase Committee, and while legal action will be begun against the theatres with which he is connected, these actions will not affect the membership of the Mayer & Schneider theatres in the Independent Motion Pictures Exhibitors Association. As was stated at the meeting, they will be kept in the Association for their own good.

"At the same meeting Isaac Katz was elected a director, to fill a vacancy."

A Progressive Exhibitor

Earl J. Myers

Exhibitor Complimented as Commerce Leader

Earl J. Myers, owner of the Majestic Theatre, Chillicothe, O., president of the Chillicothe Chamber of Commerce, was recently highly praised and commended by that body for his efficient leadership.

Born in Chillicothe 38 years ago, Mr. Myers bought the Majestic Theatre in Chillicothe in 1924, remodelling it throughout and making it the leading theatre in the town. He has just announced plans for erecting a new $800,000 house there. Recently addressing the Chamber of Commerce he told the business men of Chillicothe of the progressive stride of the motion picture industry, using several trade journals during the course of his address.

Neilan to Direct MacLean in Christie Features

An arrangement has been made between Marshall Neilan and Christie-MacLean productions whereby the director will direct the first of the Douglas MacLean productions to be produced at the Christie studio. Some time next month Neilan will move over to the Christie studio to begin working on the first of the MacLean pictures, now in preparation by Alfred A. Cohen from his story, "The Carnation Kid." Cohn will act as supervisor of the Christie-MacLean productions. Associated with him on the construction of the story are Henry McCarty and Malcolm E. Moran. "The Carnation Kid" replaces the title, "Wanted—a Woman."

The Voice of the Screen

News and Comment on All Phases of "Sound" Pictures

Talkie Highlights

HOLLYWOOD is agog over sound pictures with most of the studios being revamped and having equipment installed for the reproduction of sound. Many of them are now set to make their first talking productions.

Monta Bell declares production costs will be sent sky-high with consequent raise in prices to exhibitors and higher admission charges to the picture theatre patrons.

Musicians of the United States plan raising of $10,000,000 fund to combat menace to them of "canned music" Tax will be put on all members of unions.

Short subject producers are elated over the prospects for the coming season because of the advent of the sound pictures in their field. Indications are that they will supplant many of the present presentations.

Production activities promise to become lively again in the east, with many of the studios being reopened and equipped for sound production.

Talking pictures are reported under way in the advertising field and will be produced as rapidly as possible, but not for theatre showings.

Contracts of big Broadway stars will probably make it impossible for them to appear in talking pictures because of the effect it will have on their stage work.

Sound Pictures Are Main Topic in Hollywood

Producers Focusing Interest on Perfection of Augmented Photoplays; Studios Being Equipped

By WILLIAM McCORMACK

Los Angeles Representative, Motion Picture News

THE major topic of conversation around the studios and in the film colony among executives, players and studio attaches, is talking pictures, and that public response thus far indicates a welcome for them seems to have urged producers to focus their interests upon the perfection of augmented photoplays. Directors generally are in favor of the innovation and the differences of opinions among stars depends largely upon their individual abilities, founded upon stage training or their lack of it.

All Fox directors as well as those at Warner Brothers will make one or more talking pictures during the coming season and extensive preparations are being made at Fox studios for the expansion of the Movietone. A new Movietone stage will occupy one recently destroyed by fire and an elaborate research division and experimental department to cost upwards of $500,000 is now being erected.

Warner Brothers have two complete stages for Vitaphone reproduction and a third one nearly finished. This concern also has an elaborate laboratory research and experimental department, and besides making full length pictures are preparing to increase their output of two reel subjects.

M-G-M Building

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is building a two-story concrete building in which researches will be made of talking pictures. The structure will house four stages and a sound proof monitor room where George Hall of the Victor Phonograph Company will supervise the installation of recording apparatus.

None of the other studios have made any preparations for building studios or facilities for adding sound to their productions, although Universal will likely add sound effects to "Show Boat" and First National has similar plans.

An official announcement regarding Paramount's activities in talking pictures will be made by Adolph Zukor in New York next week. However, the completion of a sound proof stage with recording apparatus under direction of Roy J. Pomeroy, Paramount's technical director, assisted by an engineer from the Western Electric Company, is being perfected. Pomeroy is an electrical engineer himself and has been carrying on experimental work with sound in pictures for over a year.

Development and research by Pomeroy promises to bring about rapid changes in production methods and for this reason Paramount will not build elaborate buildings which they believe may have to be discarded within the next six months. Present plans seem to indicate that Paramount will confine sound productions to short subjects and novelties for the time being.

Comedies With Sound

Next season's products from Christie studios will find a number of comedies with sound accompaniment and Christie studios will be equipped for the production of sound pictures, for which contracts with an electric company in New York are being closed this week.

At United Artists studios two stages equipped with apparatus to record disc records and to record sound on film are being planned and work on these will start in perhaps ten days. D. W. Griffith, Marshall Neilan, Fred Niblo, Alfred Greene, Victor Schertzinger and numerous other directors see in the talking pictures a greater scope for their talents and have expressed confidence in its ultimate perfection.

"Talking pictures are here to stay," according to William de Mille, who acted as chairman of a meeting held last week by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at its club rooms in the Roosevelt Hotel. The Pathe-DeMille director spoke at length on the advantages of the new medium of expression for the screen over silent drama and finished his address by stating that it would undoubtedly be the ultimate entertainment of the future.

Veiller Guest of Honor

Bayard Veiller, successful playwright and author of such hits as "The Trial of Mary Dugan," "Within the Law," and other plays, attended the session as a special guest of honor. Mr. Veiller spoke upon what effect Vitaphone, Movietone and other

Director Gives Views on Sound Pictures

Monta Bell Declares Production Costs Will Be Increased

MONTA BELL, one of the foremost of directors, is a decided rebel when the discussion centers on "talking pictures." "Sound effects, yes, and synchronized music, with an occasional piece of dialogue for contrast, but straight dialogue, emphatically no," is the way Bell puts it.

Bell, a former managing editor of a large newspaper syndicate, is markedly intelligent. His heart is in the making of motion pictures, but he is thoroughly convinced that talking pictures cannot possibly be a success with the public.

Says Dialogue Will Detract

"You can't convince me that continuous dialogue in a picture will do anything but detract from its value. It will take all the art out of a picture. It will not cut production costs as has been stated by these big executives. It will have just the opposite effect.

"You mark my words that talking pictures are going to send production costs skyhigh. The distributor is going to have to get twice as much for his product from the exhibitors, and the exhibitor in turn, is going to have to raise his prices to his patrons materially if he is to make any money or even break even on talking pictures.

"They tell you that many scenes explaining a situation will be eliminated in these pictures and the action explained by those in the cast, and that as a consequence costs of production will be reduced. But that is not so, so far as the reduction is concerned.

"Here is how production costs will shoot up: Where we had big stars in the past engaged for a picture we paid them fabulous salaries and kept them busy for three or four days shooting all of the scenes in which they participated and then were through with them. What will we have to do with these same stars now? Well, we'll have to rehearse them for a matter of three or four weeks the same as they do in a legitimate Broadway production, and we'll have to pay them for rehearsals.

"And remember this: When we wanted to cut a feature film to 7,000 feet in the past we took 11,000 feet or more. We cut out what we did not need and patched it up to keep the continuity. Well, what will we have to do now? We will have to make pictures to exact order. They will have to be made to the exact footage called for. It will mean rehearse and rehearse scenes until we get them to actual perfection. With the dialogue and sound made to fit there will be no such thing as cutting a picture after a scene is completed.

What Will Be the Result

"What will be the result of all this? The scenarist will be the main figure around the studio. Pictures will be more or less incidental to the story, and must in future be built around the dialogue. The dialogue and scenes will have to be arranged by the scenarist. The director can then sit back and merely follow the story as laid down by the scenarist. Directors with stage experience will be more essential than the good director of the past who has no stage experience. Producers have made million dollar mistakes many times in the past, but they have laughed them off because they have made money despite their errors; but believe me, there will be greater mistakes made in the future than there have been in the past. There is no correcting a talking movie after it is finished. If corrections are necessary it means the picture will have practically to be made over.

"Sound effects are wonderful and should add materially to the value of a picture, and on occasions dialogue can be used to advantage, but only for the purpose of contrast, which should be rare. I can appreciate that dialogue for contrast could well have been used in the last reel of 'The Bellamy Trial.' I had made six reels in absolute silence, and it would have been a marvelous contrast if in the last reel I could have had the summation of the defense and prosecution in dialogue. The effect would have been marvelous. But that is as far as the talkies should go. The sound of a passing elevated train, the sound effects of a flood or a disaster of any kind cannot help but improve a picture, but dialogue as a regular feature, to my way of thinking, is practically impossible, and it cannot do anything but run the costs of production skyhigh."

"Voice Dissector" Shows Faults That May Be Corrected

OFFICIALS of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the University of Southern California last week launched the first "voice dissecting" experiment involving a motion picture player to correct voice imperfections. The speaking voice of Anita Page, an M-G-M player was the first dissected.

A electric "voice analyzer" was used under the supervision of Rufis B. Vonkleinsmid, president of the university. Dean Ray K. Immel of the drama department of the university was in direct charge of the experiment and introduced the use of the telegraphone, an apparatus by which voice impulses are recorded magnetically on a steel wire.

From this magnetic wire scientifically exact reproductions of voices may be made through radio amplification from a visual record of the voice vibrations on sensitized paper. From this voice imperfections are noted and they can then be corrected by the player under proper voice direction.

speaking devices would have upon the stage. All the well known tricks of the stage will be discarded, according to the playwright, and new ideas introduced.

Fred Beetson, head of the Central Casting Bureau and secretary of the Association of Producers and Distributors, outlined unique innovations to become part of the casting bureaus province. Mr. Beetson stated the Casting Bureau is to place a vocal expert in charge of a new department of the organization, whose duty it will be to test and record the voices of extra talent and those suited for parts in sound films to be used as atmosphere.

Sid Grauman, popular impresario, stated that sound pictures would undoubtedly spell the doom of prologues. All pictures will soon have their own musical accompaniment, thus doing away with expensive symphony orchestras. Grauman further stated that any exhibitor who does not have his house equipped with some form of recording device, will not be able to draw the patronage against a rival theatre so equipped.

Ben Jackson Named Fox Projection Supervisor

Fox theatres has appointed Ben Jackson supervisor of projection for Movietone, and he is now out inspecting new installations. Mr. Jackson has been with the Fox theatres projection department for the past twenty years.

It is said that Fox is installing Movietone in its new house at Nevins street and Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn.

Baltimore Little Uses Remaphone for Music

A mechanism called the Remaphone is being used at the Little theatre, Baltimore, to furnish the music to accompany the feature pictures shown there. Records interpreting the moods of the picture are used. A pianist and violinist furnish the music for the short features.

Franklin Sees End of Silent Photoplay

"WITHIN the next three years the silent photoplay with its explanatory subtitles will be as obsolete as the horse-car," said Harold B. Franklin, president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., who recently visited San Francisco to confer with A. M. Bowles division manager for the corporation.

"The theatre has always played an important role in civilization," Franklin continued. "In the future years its role will be more important still. The theatre will literally bring the whole world before the eyes of the playgoer."

Firnatone Production Is Started in Jersey

With Nathaniel Shilkret directing the Victor Symphony Orchestra, the Victor Talking Machine Company has started active work in its Camden, N. J., studio to synchronize its first Firnatone production, First National's motion picture, "Lilac Time," starring Colleen Moore.

Another crew of Victor experts, headed by Raymond and Charles Sooy, is gathering special effects for the production, capturing the sounds of airplane motors at a New Jersey aviation field, trapping the rattle of machine guns at the Philadelphia Navy Yard and picking up other noises that will be laid into the mosaic of sound which will fit perfectly into the presentation of "Lilac Time" when it is shown at a Broadway legitimate theatre.

W. W. Clark, manager of the Music and Record Division for Victor, is in charge of the "Lilac Time" synchronization. Songs and speaking effects will be included in the production.

2 Vitaphone Road Shows Started by Warners

Warner Bros. started camera work this week on two of their Road Shows with Vitaphone for 1928-29.

Al Jolson is under way in the first scenes in "The Singing Fool" which is being megaphoned by Lloyd Bacon from Leslie S. Barrows' play. Betty Bronson who is playing opposite the star is also working in the preliminary sequences along with Josephine Dunn, Davey Lee, Arthur Housman and Reed Howes.

The second Vitaphone special now occupying the attention of the studio is "The Terror," the first production to be made with sound replacing subtitles. This is based on the play by Edgar Wallace and is being directed by Roy Del Ruth. May McAvoy, Edward Everett Horton and Louise Fazenda head its cast supported by Alec Francis, Mathew Betz, Holmes Herbert, Otto Hoffman, Joseph Girard and John Miljan.

Victor to Supply Full Musical Programs

A COMPLETE musical program, synchronized to the action and recorded either on records or directly on the film itself, will in the near future be a part of every important photoplay, it was predicted by Edward E. Shumaker, President of the Victor Talking Machine Company, as he sailed for Europe on the Berengaria Wednesday evening.

"The time is not far distant," Mr. Shumaker said, "when the smallest motion picture theatre in the country will be able to show its pictures with a specially designed musical program comparable to the musical setting given the same picture in the largest metropolitan movie palace. The Victor Company is recording complete synchronized musical programs for big feature pictures. We are not only making the records, but are using our experts to prepare the musical scores and our leading conductors and their orchestras to play them."

$10,000,000 Mu icians' Fund Planned

American Federation Planning to Combat Inroads Being Made by "Machine Music"

THAT the American Federation of Musicians is raising a war fund of $10,000,000 to combat the inroads of "machine music" in theatres and other amusement places throughout the country has been learned.

The Central Trades and Labor Unions of St. Louis, Mo., at the request of Steve Butler, representing the local union of musicians, has endorsed the movement and pledged its moral support in the campaign against machine or canned music.

The decision to raise the $10,000,000 war fund was reached at the national convention of the American Federation of Musicians held in Louisville, Ky., recently. It is planned to levy an assessment of 2 per cent on the weekly pay of all musicians affiliated with the national body. There are some 75,000 union musicians in the country at present. The pay of members of theatre orchestras range from $48 to $90 weekly. On that basis the $10,000,000 fund will accrue at the rate of more than $80,000 per week.

The national officers of the Federation of Musicians have been empowered to continue the assessment after the fund has been accumulated in the event of strikes, lockouts or other conditions requiring large expenditures.

The initial assessment toward the $10,000,000 fund will be levied the first week in September. In addition to the 2 per cent tax a number of local unions of musicians, including the St. Louis local, now assess members 1 per cent of their weekly pay toward financing the fight on "machine music." A revenue of $35,000 a year is derived by the St. Louis union for that purpose. According to Butler the 1 per cent charge will continue after the 2 per cent national assessment goes into effect.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators has been in session during the week in Detroit and will conclude meetings on Friday. It was indicated on the third day of the sessions that no formal action will be taken on sound pictures at the convention. The introduction of sound into pictures and the effort it will have on employment have been discussed in secret sessions, it is said, but there is no indication of what action may follow.

The Detroit sessions opened with 730 delegates in attendance. Harry Griffin, secretary of Local 38 opened the meeting and introduced various civic officials, including Charles Lougheed, president of the Detroit Typographical Union, who substituted for the president of the Detroit Federation of Labor.

Vitaphone Expanding Rapidly; Many New Installations

VITAPHONE, first of the sound devices in connection with motion pictures, is extending its operations rapidly and is installing its sound reproduction equipment in theatres all over the United States.

Since the installation of Vitaphone at the Mark Strand Theatre in New York, where "Tenderloin" is now playing, the Stanley Theatre Circuit, which controls the Strand, has started to install Vitaphone in all of its theatres throughout the state of Pennsylvania. The majority of the major theatres belonging to this circuit in Philadelphia have already been equipped with the apparatus.

Another important circuit that has recently installed Vitaphone in its theatres is Midwest. Eleven installations have now been made by this chain, five of these being in the city of Milwaukee.

The E. J. Sparks Circuit, one of the pioneers to install Vitaphone, has recently added that equipment in its theatres in Ocala, Gainesville and Fort Myers. The majority of the Sparks theatres in Florida are now Vitaphone equipped.

The Durkee Circuit in that city at the present time has twelve of its houses equipped with Vitaphone. Last week the Rialto and New Theatres made installations. These brought a total of 400 theatres throughout the country that have been or are being equipped with the Vitaphone apparatus. It is expected that the number will reach 750 by September 1.

The call for installations has made it necessary for Vitaphone to open new branches in different parts of the United States. A Southern branch has just been opened in the city of Atlanta. W. B. Fulton has been installed as manager with headquarters at 163 Walton Street. Paul J. Swift, general sales manager of Vitaphone has been in Atlanta for several days supervising the opening of the new branch.

Originally the business of the entire country was handled from the New York office, but as installations increased, the need was found for a branch in the Midwest. This branch was located in Chicago at 839 South Wabash, with H. D. James in charge as manager.

The third branch was opened some months ago in San Francisco, the offices being located at 71 Leavenworth Street, with E. T. Roberts manager. The New York branch under the management of Jack R. Keegan, is located at 321 West 44th Street.

Short Subject Productions With Sound Promise Big Season

WITH practically all of the leading companies engaged in making short subjects, already licensed or now negotiating for licenses for sound films there promises to be a tremendous impetus in the short subject field during the 1928-29 season. Leading circuits are signing for more and more short product and it is thought that sound films in this field will make the short product far more attractive than ever before.

With the advent of sound effects and dialogue applied to the shorts it is likely that prologues and presentations will be materially cut down. And with the latter prospect in view producers of the shorts are determined to make their product better than ever before.

Production in this field of sound subjects is going forward at a rapid rate with acts and short features of various varieties being turned out at a rapid rate. Vitaphone plans to release sound pictures at the rate of four a week next season. These will be known as Vitaphone playlets and Vitaphone presentations. They will run one and two reels in length, with a large number of them already completed.

Vitaphone Playlets include a number of dramatic and comedy sketches in which dialogue and music are used. Vitaphone Presentations is the brand name for an assortment of product in one reel length, which includes operatic, song and jazz numbers.

Fox has not yet determined the number of Movietone entertainments to be released next season. There are sixteen of these in one and two reels now ready and there will be many additions to the list before the opening of the new season. Movietone will use Broadway stars in many of their subpects, Joe Cook and Will Mahoney being the latest to appear before the cameras.

The Hal Roach organization recently signed a contract with Electrical Research Products Corporation and is now installing equipment at the studio for synchronization of sound with pictures. Production work will get under way in the near future, but it is not yet known how many pictures will be made with sound for the next season.

Vocafilm on which David Hochreich, president of the company declares distribution will be through Educational, has a release schedule of 52 units for next season. Each one is to run about 25 minutes. A number of song and jazz numbers have already been completed, as have several sketches in which are combined dialogue and music.

Han-a-Phone plans to produce 52 units for the season. Voicephone Company is the production unit; and equipment is being designed for marketing especially in small theatres. The equipment synchronizes action and sound photographically. The subjects, it is planned, will feature name acts, with releases scheduled at the rate of one a week.

Independent Companies Consider Talking Pictures

JUST what the independent companies will do with sound movies is even more problematical than it is with the larger companies. The independents seem somewhat wary for the immediate future of the "talkies" and the equipment that will be available in the theatres for the handling of their product. It is likely however, that most of them will at least have synchronized music with some of their product if not actual sound effects and dialogue.

Columbia Pictures is giving a lot of consideration to sound pictures, but has not yet come to a definite conclusion as to what they will do with them for the present. An executive of the company expressed the belief that not enough theatres would be equipped with sound reproduction devices for the present to expend any considerable amount of money in the production of these pictures.

According to advices from the south, however, Cecil Mayberry, general sales manager for Columbia is quoted as saying that the company now has under consideration the making of four synchronized specials for use with Photophone.

Sam Sax, president of Gotham Productions announces that negotiations have been completed for the making of a talking picture by that company. He says that work will begin at an early date on "The Girl From Argentine,' in which Carmel Myers will have the title role.

According to Budd Rogers, vice-president of the company, contracts have been consummated with a big New York electrical and radio concern, the immediate result of which will be the sending of technical representatives to the Gotham studio in Hollywood for the purpose of setting up the necessary machinery.

Jesse Goldburg, head of First Division Pictures declares he will probably have two talking movies for distribution during the coming season. He is decidedly opposed to dialogue in pictures but says he is willing to go to the expense of making two just to hold up the end of the independents. It has not yet been decided what productions will have sound accompaniment. Others of the independents still have the matter under consideration.

Irving Berlin Song for Vilma Banky

IRVING BERLIN has written a new song, called "Marie" after the leading character of "The Awakening," which is to be used as the theme song of Vilma Banky's first independent starring picture for Samuel Goldwyn. The song will be used extensively in the Movietone accompaniment to the picture, which is being produced as the first use of sound and music reproducing devices by a United Artists unit.

Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld will be responsible for the orchestration of Mr. Berlin's new song for Miss Banky's picture and for the other music used to embellish "The Awakening."

Vitaphone Sequences for "Noah's Ark" Next Week

Technicians at the Warner Studio are completing preparatory work for the filming of the Vitaphone sequences in "Noah's Ark," which will be started next week under the supervision of J. L. Warner, head of the studio, and Darryl Francis Zanuck, associate executive. This is a special vehicle for Dolores Costello, and Warner Bros. are planning many elaborate effects for those portions of the story to be Vitaphoned.

"Noah's Ark," which is now in its third month of production, is being directed by Michael Curtiz, with Miss Costello's supporting cast including George O'Brien, Noah Beery, Louise Fazenda, Paul McAllister, Anders Randolf, Myrna Loy and others.

M-G-M Preparing to Make First "Talkie"

Part of the studios of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at Culver City are now being converted for the making of talking pictures, the first of which will be "Breakers Ahead," a Fanny Hurst story. Lionel Barrymore, recently signed to a long term contract will be seen and heard in the leading role.

The new sound stage is being equipped with sound proof interior sets, electrical panels for recording instruments and a special laboratory. J. S. Ward and Major Thomas Levison, officials of the Western Electric Company, will supervise installation of the recording apparatus.

Players Renew Contracts with Paramount

Renewing contracts with Paramount are Neil Hamilton and Mary Brian, players, and Hans Drier, architectural expert. Olga Baclonova, Russian actress, has signed with Paramount as a featured performer.

Detroit Has "Long Run" Sound Theatre

THE State Theatre in Detroit, a Kunsky house, will be dedicated to and will run long run sound pictures almost exclusively. Musicians numbering 25 will be continued in the pit, but the stage bands and presentations will be eliminated. Vitaphone and Movietone equipment is being installed.

The success of Vitaphone novelties at the Capitol and of "The Jazz Singer" and "Tenderloin" at the Madison are said to have resulted in the switch to sound pictures at the State. The Capitol will continue sound shorts. Another downtown Kunsky house plans to install Western Electric Equipment.

Wilson and Hackathorne in "Sally's Shoulders"

Lois Wilson, who has appeared in several FBO pictures, and George Hackathorne, who is returning to the FBO lots after an absence of several years, have been engaged for leading roles in "Sally's Shoulders," which will be directed by Lynn Shores. Huntley Gordon will also have a featured part.

The story of "Sally's Shoulders," by Beatrice Burton, has been syndicated to over 500 newspapers. Work on the picture is scheduled to start in a week's time.

"Hungarian Rhapsody" is Pommer's Second for Ufa

Erich Pommer is supervising "Hungarian Rhapsody," his second production for Ufa. Directed by Hans Schwartz it is just going into work. Pommer's first production under his new Ufa contract has been completed; it was directed by Joe May. The story is an adaptation of the German novel, "Karl und Anna."

Gotham Buys Song, "Among My Souvenirs"

"Among My Souvenirs," the song by Edgar Leslie and Horatio Nichols, has been acquired for filming by Gotham Productions. The picture will be released on the 1928-29 program of 26 productions, displacing "The Night Express." The song publishers will co-operate with Gotham in exploitation activities.

Tiffany-Stahl Gets Four Peter B. Kyne Stories

Four stories by Peter B. Kyne have been purchased by Tiffany-Stahl. They include "At the Top of the Mast," "A Prophet Without Honor," "The Man in Hobbles" and "Maggie Mulrennin, Mudhen."

Fitz Roy Assistant to Stahl in Studio Work

Roy Fitz Roy has been appointed assistant to John M. Stahl, production head of Tiffany-Stahl. He will aid Stahl on all matters pertaining to the physical handling of production.

Europe Preparing Own Sound Devices

WHETHER or not the American producers make sound film in foreign languages, it is likely that European countries will not be long without the "talkies." At the International Film Exhibition at The Hague two systems for synchronization are being displayed.

One of these devices was invented by Henrich J. Kuechenmister, who was responsible for the German gramophone. The other involves the softening of the edge of the film and the application of an electrically operated needle to make the sound records. When the record is completed the film is rehardened to the consistency of gutta percha.

Big Broadway Stars May Not Be Available for "Talkies"

WITH the impression prevailing that the biggest of the Broadway stars will be converted to screen stars and that there is a general scurrying of producers to sign them up, there seems to be a hitch in that direction. It seems doubtful that Broadway's biggest stage stars are going to be available.

Legitimate producing managers along Broadway have the leading stars signed to contracts for the run of the present play in which they are engaged, or over a considerable period of time. These producers are not inclined to let down the bars to the movies and the Actors Equity Association is not inclined to have them do so.

Frank Gillmore, executive secretary of Equity says it is often detrimental to the interests of the entire company in which the star is appearing to have him work through the day at a motion picture studio. There have been cases, he said where a star, after working in the studio has reported at the theatre too tired to do his stage work with all the enthusiasm necessary with the result that the attendance soon fell off at a rapid rate, the show was closed prematurely and the entire company thus was thrown out of work. Under these circumstances it may be more difficult than generally supposed to corral some of the stars or featured players of the legitimate stage.

N. Y. Studios Being Converted for Production of "Talkies"

WHETHER or not the stimulus in the production of sound and talking pictures will have any decided effect on production activities in Hollywood, there will undoubtedly be considerable in the production line going on in the Eastern studios in the near future. Acts are now being shot in New York regularly with indications that future productions will be resumed at the local studios before very long.

Many stars of New York productions are said to be sought for talking pictures for the next season and if they are to be used they will have to do their work where they can continue in current stage productions.

Benny Berk, formerly production manager for Johnny Hines has taken over the Pathe Studio at 134th Street and Park Avenue, and has moved in with a staff of technicians. The studio is now known as the Manhattan Studio. Johnny Hines and C. C. Burr, who have announced their intention of using the sound devices, may do their production at this studio.

It is said that a number of independent companies are planning production activities with the "talkies" in the New York studios, with several of them casting an eye on the Manhattan plant. It s not unlikely that Vocafilm productions for Educational release will be made here.

First National Pictures are reported as considering plans to do some production at the Cosmopolitan Studios located at 127th Street and Second Avenue. It is said that the lower stage may be converted for the making of sound films and that it may be divided for First National and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Paramount has already started the work of converting the company studios just across the bridge on Long Island for sound production, and Warners are fitting up the old Vitagraph Studio in Brooklyn.

Talking Pictures Coming in Advertising Field

THE talking moving picture is to have its place in the advertising field and for educational purposes as well as for use in the theatre. This is foreseen in statements from P. L. Thomson, publicity director for the Western Electric Company, and William H. Bristol, president of the Bristol Company, manufacturers of industrial recording instruments, published in Sales Management & Advertisers Weekly.

"After contracts with motion picture producing organizations have been filled," said Mr. Thomson, "the company will turn its attention to the promotion and sale of the Movietone for advertising."

The Dictaphone Corporation has already had made a talking picture for advertising media. A private showing of it was held at the Belmont Hotel in New York City last week. The picture used was a Bristol-phone synchronization. Discussing the talking picture for advertising purposes, Mr. Bristol is quoted as saying:

"The applications for these synchronized pictures are not limited to theatres, but may be used for industrial and educational purposes. There exists a large field for this type of motion pictures when synchronized with the voice to tell the story which will make the picture more interesting and entertaining."

Mr. Bristol is a successful mechanical engineer and has been working on the idea of a talking moving picture since 1915.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Tiffany-Stahl Signs Talent for New Productions

Tiffany-Stahl recently annexed the signatures of Elmer Clifton, Dorothy Nourse and Virginia Valli for work in the new productions for the 1928-29 schedule.

Clifton will direct "The Devil's Apple Tree," one of the star series to be made by Dorothy Sebastian. Miss Nourse, a graduate of the Paramount school for players, will be seen in the leading role of the new color classic, "No Woman Allowed." Miss Valli, signed to appear in two Tiffany-Stahl vehicles, will, it is said, appear in one of the John M. Stahl and one of the Reginald Barker specials, the titles of which have not been announced.

First National Writers Preparing 9 Stories

The First National staff of adaptors and scenarists are now engaged with nine stories for production at the studio at Burbank.

Pantages in Deal for 4 New Theatres

ALEXANDER PANTAGES, founder of the Pantages Circuit and owner of 70 theatres, announced in San Francisco he is closing deals for four new show houses one to be in San Francisco. "It is to be located somewhere in the Mission," said Mr. Pantages. "I cannot at this time give the location for obvious business reasons, but the deal is closed."

The other three new theatres he is planning are to be located in Oakland, Sacramento, and San Jose, where he already has options on sites.

The total investment for the four theatres, Pantages said, will be between $7,000,000 and $10,000,000. Each theatre itself will mean an investment of a million and a half and the buildings will be constructed for office purposes also.

Gerald Duffy is doing the continuity for "Out of the Ruins." "Glorifying the American Girl" Postponed

Production on "Glorifying the American Girl," which Paramount planned to screen in cooperation with Florenz Ziegfeld, will not be launched this season, an announcement from the production department of Paramount reads. The cause for the postponement is said to be due to the difficulty in obtaining a story adequate enough for the elaborate production planned.

Ruth Elder, who has signed for the leading role in "Glorifying the American Girl," will become the heroine of "Moran of the Marines" instead.

Norma Talmadge Ends "The Woman Disputed"

Camera work on "The Woman Disputed," her second independent production for United Artists, has been completed by Norma Talmadge. The picture will be distributed internationally in the early fall of this year. Oliver Marsh did the photographic work. Henry King, who directed, and Hal C. Kern, film actor, are now cutting the film down to eight reels.

Audrey Ferris Elevated to Stardom by Warners

Stardom has been awarded by Warner Bros. to Audrey Ferris after a year as a member of their stock company. The brunette player came to Warner Bros. in 1927 after appearing in prologues at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre in Los Angeles. A small role in "Slightly Used," with May McAvoy, gained for her the feminine lead in "Ginsberg the Great."

Theatre Owner Makes Loan from State

PETER MAGARO, pioneer motion picture theatre owner of Harrisburg, Pa., is the first individual ever to obtain a loan from the State of Pennsylvania. The amount is the modest sum of $400,000 which State Treasurer Samuel S. Lewis announced on May 29 had been advanced to Mr. Magaro for a first lien on the valuable property the former theatre man owns in the heart of the Harrisburg business distict at Fourth and Market streets. The loan is at 5 per cent and is the first to be made under a law which permits the State to invest custodial funds in first mortgages on real estate and other types of bonds. Mr. Magaro several years ago sold his Regent theatre to Loew's, Inc. There are unconfirmed rumors that he plans to erect a new theatre at his Fourth and Market site, but he declines to state the purpose for which he borrowed the money.

Miss Ferris is now scheduled for the stellar leads in four for next year. The first is "Women They Talk About," to be followed by "No Questions Asked." Other stories in which she will appear are "The Little Wildcat" and "Fancy Baggage."

Mary Brian will play her 26th leading role in motion pictures opposite Charles Rogers as the feminine lead in his new Paramount picture as yet without a title.

Advocates of Daylight Saving Defeat Theatres

THEATRE interests finally lost a bitter fight against the daylight saving time in Indianapolis when the city council passed the measure over the veto of Mayor L. Ert Slack.

Slack's veto partially resulted from the bitter protest of Charles R. Metzger of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana. Passage of the ordinance creating daylight time over the protest of theater owners and other prominent institutions was a surprise to Indianapolis residents.

Downtown theaters continued to operate on the central time schedule temporarily. Majority of institutions moved clocks forward Monday. Metzger said theaters will decide the issue individually.

Welsh General Manager of Universal City

Becomes New Studio Chief at West Coast Succeeding Henry E. Henigson, Resigned

CARL LAEMMLE this week announced the appointment of Robert E. Welsh as General Manager of Universal City, succeeding Henry E. Henigson, resigned. Mr. Welsh enters upon his new duties immediately. As the new Universal studio chief he will control all of the company's production activities.

Mr. Henigson retires after two and a half years as the "U" City General Manager. Mr. Laemmle accepted his resignation with regret.

The appointment of Mr. Welsh is a logical one. For the last six months he has been Carl Laemmle's personal representative at the Coast and has thoroughly familiarized himself with the personnel and the machinery of the net work of intercommunicating interests which comprise Universal's West Coast studios.

It would be a difficult thing to find in the whole industry a man with a better all around knowledge of the picture business than "Bob" Welsh. He has been an integral part of it from the trade paper stand, where he was Managing Editor of Motion Picture News and played an important part in the building of the paper; from the distribution standpoint; in the advertising, publicity and exploitation fields, and has had a very useful experience in cutting, titling and remoulding pictures.

Robert E. Welsh, newly appointed General Manager to the Universal Studios

Added to this picture experience is a thorough grounding in the daily newspaper field and an interesting experience covering twelve years in New Jersey politics.

"Lonesome" Pre-views Create Fine Impression

CARL LAEMMLE, JR. ,is assuredly following in the footsteps of his illustrious father as a pioneer. The heir to the Universal interests, who recently passed his twentieth milestone, has produced a picture called "Lonesome" which indicates that young Carl is destined, as was his father, to be a trail breaker.

Directed by Paul Fejos, "Lonesome" introduces a new type of menace—one that is not playd by an individual, but is depicted by circumstance, viz., the separation of the two romantically inclined youngsters who, after falling in love, are separated by circumstance, and temporarily lost to each other. The photographic effects, for which Gilbert Warrenton deserves much credit, are also in the picture's favor.

The Greater Movie Season

West Coast Greater Movie Season will be ushered in on August 18. Plans now being made indicate the greatest and most wide-spread campaigns ever held on the Pacific Coast.

Jeff Lazarus, advertising and publicity director of West Coast Theatres, has been appointed by Harold B. Franklin, president, chairman of the committee in charge of mapping out the comprehensive plan for Greater Movie Season that will be used throughout the circuit.

The new product will be ready by that time and it is said to be one of the most outstanding lineups ever offered exhibitors. President Franklin, accompanied by J. J. Sullivan, West Coast Chief buyer, is now in New York to line up next year's product and particular care will be taken in the bookings for the first four weeks of Greater Movie Season.

Settle Suit Out of Court

The suit of Ralph Spence, dean of filmdom's comedy title writers, against the Christie Film Corp., has been amicably settled out of court. Spence maintained he received but $2,000 on a contract guaranteeing him $5,000 for writing titles for "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Spence is now permanently affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

At Miss Damita's Dinner

At the first dinner under the auspices of the Hollywood Association of Foreign Correspondents, held at the Hotel Roosevelt on May 29, in honor of Lily Damita, about 200 people assembled to welcome the French actress who recently joined the Sam Goldwyn forces.

Mr. Goldwyn, in extending a welcome to foreign writers, foreign composers, directors and stars, referred to Charles Chaplin and Mary Pickford as two foreigners who had made good. He also scored the French newspapers for bringing about the restrictive laws against American made films and said it was undoubtedly instigated by lack of cordiality on the part of Hollywood toward French artists.

Other speakers were Sid Grauman, Charles Chaplin and Miss Rita Kissin, secretary of the association. Forty-two countries were represented at the dinner and 16 languages were spoken by guests at the table.

Kermit Maynard Signed

Kermit Maynard, well known western cow-boy, stunt and trick rider, has been signed for five years by the International Producing and Distributing Company, and will be featured in a series of western features.

Maynard Westerns will be distributed to the Independent Exchanges, and his features will be produced from magazine stories by well-known authors, the first of which will be "Fires of Fate," by W. C. Tuttle. This will go into production about June 15 under the supervision of Colonel S. Elfelt, who produced the first western features in which Ken Maynard, Kermit's brother, was starred.

"Chuck" Reisner Engaged

The M-G-M comedy team composed of Karl Dane and George K. Arthur will have the benefit of direction from Charles F. ("Chuck") Reisner in their new picture, "Brotherly Love." It is a little known fact that Reisner, while a vaudevillian, wrote the wartime song, "Good-bye Broadway, Hello France."

Hollywood—Continued

Two Weddings Announced

Two popular members of the film colony are to be married in June. The announcement of the engagement of Phil Gersdorf, of the publicity staff of DeMille studios, to Miss Beulah Metcalf was recently made. They will be married in Fresno. Joseph Schenck's efficient secretary, Miss Ruth Nolander is also to be married in June to David Busch.

"U" Seeking Rights to Play

Negotiations by cable have been started by Edward J. Montague, editor-in-chief of Universal's Scenario Department, for the film rights to "Owl's Eyes," a baffling mystery play that proved such an extraordinary success in Bordeaux, France, where it was first produced, that it was immediately transferred to Paris and is now enjoying a run there.

A Busy Character Actor

William Courtright, who will have an important role in "Kit Carson," Fred Thomson's next production for Paramount, has been in every Thomson picture made during the past three years and Courtright was a mere youth of 62 when he applied for his first job in motion pictures—and got it. Courtright had been on the stage for 42 years as a Shakespearian actor, circus performer, comic opera singer, burlesque favorite and vaudevillian. Motion Pictures were just coming into serious consideration and while Mr. Courtright was in Los Angeles on a vaudeville tour, he met D. W. Griffith, who was then directing for Biograph. Courtright has been in motion pictures ever since.

Biro Completes Work

Lajos Biro has completed the adaptation and continuity of "The Squall," for First National and the direction has been assigned to the Hungarian director, Alexander Korda.

Beaumont's Assignment

Harry Beaumont is to direct "The Single Man," the next Lew Cody-Aileen Pringle comedy-drama for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. Beaumont recently completed "Our Dancing Mothers."

Barbara Kent Loaned

Universal has agreed to loan Barbara Kent to the British Canadian Pictures, Ltd., a motion picture company operating in Canada. The ranch of the Prince of Wales near Calgary, Alberta, Canada, will be partially used in making this picture. The Prince is reported as interested in the project and offered the use of his ranch which, incidentally, is only a short distance from the home of Miss Kent, at Gadsby

Berger to Direct Jannings

Ludwig Berger, the German director now under contract to Paramount, has been announced as the man who will handle "Sins of the Fathers," Emil Jannings' next vehicle. Berger has just finished directing another player of his own nationality, Pola Negri in "The Woman from Moscow."

"Fazil" at Carthay Circle

The run of "Street Angel" terminated this week at the Carthay Circle theatre. On Friday "Fazil," another Fox Production, will be presented by Fred Miller. Grauman's Chinese theatre will also end the run of "The Trail of '98" on Sunday, June 24, and "The Godless Girl" without a prologue will occupy the screen.

Ethel Jackson a Hostess

Miss Ethel Jackson, screen actress who appeared in "Drums of Love," entertained 75 guests at Tom Gubbin's unique Chinese restaurant in Chinatown last Wednesday night. Among the guests who assembled above Gubbin's art shop were Estelle Taylor, Jack Dempsey, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Jackson, parents of the star, Agnes Cristine Johnson, Martha Sleeper, Sally Eilers, Matty Kemp, Arthur Lake, E. R. Moak, Jerry Mayer, Wade Warner, Monroe Lathrop, James Mitchell, Arthur Dunning, Dan Thomas, Ruth and Alice Tillesley, Dorothy Donnell, Mark Larkin, Marquis Busby and Mr. and Mrs. George Shaffer. Everyone was presented with unique souvenirs of the occasion.

Again With Warners

Jane McDonough has returned to the DeMille publicity staff, after several weeks at Warner Bros., on Hal Wallis' roster.

Starts a Saddle Club

Frances Starr, wife of Business Manager Darrill Faralla, at First National, has organized the Saddle Club, Englewood, and many of filmdom's elite are learning the gentle art of riding horseback.

Von Stroheim Back

Eric von Stroheim is back from New York, all set to direct Gloria Swanson in one picture on a ten-weeks schedule.

Jesse Weil Producer

Jesse Weil, publicist, has turned producer and is making a series of one reelers called "Embarrassing Moments."

Establish Story Agency in N. Y. and Hollywood

A LITERARY agency to be known as Anglo-American Authors, with offices in New York and Hollywood has been established with the amalgamation of the interests of Brandt and Brandt, James B. Pinker and Son, and Ann Watkins, Inc. The combine was made, it is said, to establish the story market in Hollywood.

Mary Ann Scully will represent the new organization in Hollywood and have complete charge of the selling of the agency's product on the west coast. Murray Howell of Pinker and Son, Leila Worthington of Brandt and Brandt and Ann Watkins will operate the eastern office.

Hersholt and Sloman

When Jean Hersholt and Director Edward Sloman finish the screen version of "The Girl on the Barge," Rupert Hughes' story, they will immediately embark upon another picture for Universal, "The Braggart," an original story by Benjamin Kutler. The continuity is now being written by Charles Kenyon. Hersholt and Sloman are now on location at Whitehall, New York.

Charlie Murray's Next

The First National studio is planning "Do Your Duty," an original story by Julien Josephson, as Charlie Murray's next starring vehicle. The veteran comic will be seen as a cop in this one. His vacation in the east completed, Murray is now back on his way to the coast.

A New Curwood Western

The first of the "stunt cowboy" series of 12 pictures which will star Bob Curwood has been placed into production by the Universal studio forces, under the title of "Jackson Comes Home." Walter Fabian is directing the series under the supervision of William Lord Wright. The credit for both story and continuity goes to Fabian. Supporting the cowboy star are Alma Rayford, George Cheseboro, Walter Brennon and others.

Evelyn Brent Returns

After a vacation spent in New York, Evelyn Brent is back in Hollywood where she is scheduled to begin work soon on a Paramount production in which she will be co-starred with Clive Brook.

M-G-M Signs Miss Dunn

Josephine Dunn, an ex-New York City show girl who has made good in pictures, has been signed to a long-term contract with M-G-M as a result of her work in the William Haines vehicle, "Excess Baggage," in which she is the feminine lead. The contract award followed the filming of the first few scenes. Miss Dunn will play the second feminine lead in "The Singing Fool," having been loaned by M-G-M to the Warner Bros.

Sign Screen Writer

First National Pictures have signed Tom J. Geraghty, well-known screen writer, who picturized "Harold Teen," "The Big Noise" and "The Mad Hour" among other of his recent works.

Wallace Lupino

The featured comedy role in the first of the Educational-Tuxedo comedies to go into work at the Educational Studios is being played by Wally Lupino, the talented brother of Lupino Lane. Betty Boyd has been chosen for the chief feminine part, and Jules White is directing.

Instead of starring one comedian throughout the series as the Educational studio did last year, nearly every one of the six two-reel Tuxedo comedies will feature a different comedian.

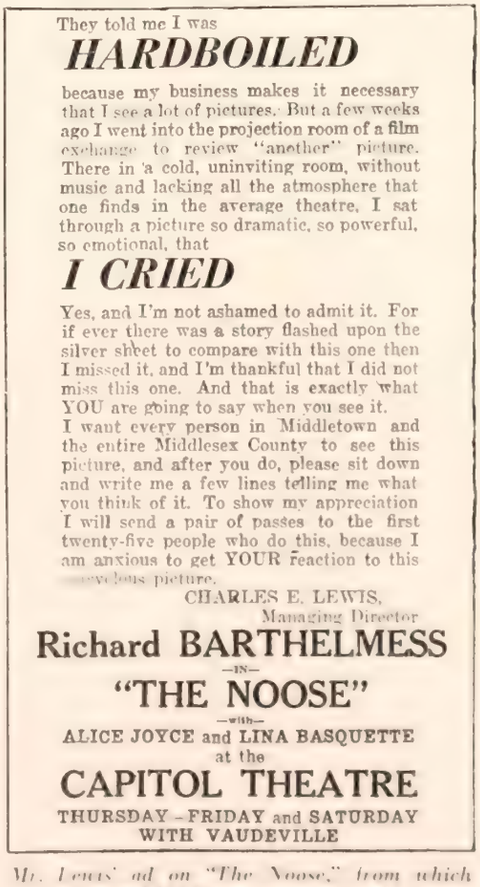
A Few Words on Personal Appeal

In the smaller towns where the one or two newspapers reach the greatest majority of the population, and is considered the most important publicity medium, there is one method of "personal appeal" that has been used with great success in several instances. We used it with fine results.

Of course, we concede one thing right now; that in some towns that we have visited we learned that the personal recommendation from the local theatre manager is sufficient to keep most of the folks away. But that is just one of the unfortunate conditions in our business today.

On "The Noose" we are reproducing an ad., which we inserted in our local paper on the day before the picture opened. What we consider the best part of this ad., is the fact that it really represented our feelings exactly as we wrote the copy. Over 1,100 letters were received within the week following the showing of the picture which we considered remarkable in a town of our size. But it brought out the fact, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that most of the people DO read the local paper, that they did believe what we said. And it also boosted our mailing list considerably. Now, it is admitted that this idea cannot be used for every ordinary picture. First of all remember, it must be all you claim for it—and even more, and it must be a picture that is really worthy of such advertising methods.

"Stunting" Without Picture Title



Creating a tie-up with a local department store, without necessarily tieing it up with some particular picture is just another way of keeping your theatre's name before the public.

In one of our towns we arranged a table-dressing stunt in the local department store by girls in the senior class of the high school. We gave it plenty of publicity, and the store furnished everything else including a window display calling attention to the "stunt." It attracted wide interest all over the town and it was impossible to accommodate the crowds who came to witness it. But throughout the entire stunt, the public knew that it was sponsored by the department store and the theatre. This same thought is applicable on numerous other ideas and merely confirms, what many never believed possible, that a theatre could tie up with some local store without bringing a particular picture into the proposition.

Good Publicity on Boys' Exhibit

The same might be said about the National Boys' Week Campaign which took place the first week in May. We were fortunate in having a large lobby and at the meeting of the Boys' Work committee of the Chamber of Commerce we sponsored the idea of an exhibit of boys' work. They got behind the idea solidly and the local grammar and high schools, the county Y. M. C. A., the city Y. M. C. A., the Junior Achievement, Boy Scouts and State Trade school all entered the exhibit. A portion of the lobby was roped off and divided among all those participating with exhibits and we reproduced the top of the front page announcement that appeared in the local paper. Thousands of people visited the exhibits and it is only reasonable to judge that the theatre benefited by the public coming into the lobby, where they saw, in addition to the exhibits, special display frames announcing the coming attractions. Our ushers and other attendants, who were on duty in the lobby, reported any number of remarks passed about the folks seeing these signs and mentioning that they would certainly not miss "such-an-such" a picture.

These incidents are just part of those "natural resources" that we mentioned in our first article. The small town today is crammed full of such possibilities if we would but take advantage of them.

They told me I was

HARDBOILED

because my business makes it necessary that I see a lot of pictures. But a few weeks ago I went into the projection room of a film exchange to review "another" picture. There in a cold, uninviting room, without music and lacking all the atmosphere that one finds in the average theatre, I sat through a picture so dramatic, so powerful, so emotional, that

I CRIED

Yes, and I'm not ashamed to admit it. For if ever there was a story flashed upon the silver sheet to compare with this one then I missed it, and I'm thankful that I did not miss this one. And that is exactly what YOU are going to say when you see it.

I want every person in Middletown and the entire Middlesex County to see this picture, and after you do, please sit down and write me a few lines telling me what you think of it. To show my appreciation I will send a pair of passes to the first twenty-five people who do this, because I am anxious to get YOUR reaction to this marvelous picture.

Organist, Weekly Change Feature

Theatrical entertainment is not unlike styles in wearing apparel, in that changes are constantly taking place. For the past season or two it has become very popular to play up your organ and organist with illustrated song stories. With a little plugging and any half-way decent organist you can popularize this form of entertainment in your own town. The slides themselves are obtainable from practically any music publisher at little and most times, at no cost at all. Feature your organist with a weekly change and put him or her under a "spot" while the slides are being flashed. It is so easy to create a following in the smaller towns on this stunt that with almost every theatre boasting of some sort of an organ, you should make it mean more than a relief instrument in your music pit.

On the Advisability of Specialty Nights

There is one subject that we have been questioned on more than any other in the past few weeks. That is the advisability of what is generally known as "specialty nights." These "nights" being devised to improve business on dull evenings. They come under the heading of events of different names among which you will find Surprise Nite, Opportunity Nite, Amateur Nite, Gift Nite, etc., etc.

Now, our frank opinion on this subject is that it must be treated like a patient by a doctor. Each case calling for some particular treatment.

In some towns, and in some theatres, it is almost suicide to attempt such things, as the high standard of that theatre might not permit such things. Then again most anyone of the above named specialty nights could be put on with enough surrounding dignity to let it fit in the finest theatre in the country.

We had a theatre with a Wednesday night business that would make you want to cry. It was brutal. Just one of those things, as you would say. We finally pocketed our "pride" if you want to call it that, and inaugurated a "Gift Nite" with a double feature policy.

At the start of this "Gift Night" business only improved about $25. They seemed to be skeptical, but within three weeks we had built up business on a "rotten" night from about $100 to almost $400, and it has been hanging around that figure ever since. We inject enough variety in the running of this feature to keep them interested and it certainly was profitable.

Surprise Night vs Opportunity Night

In another town we developed opposition and as a business booster they put in an Opportunity Night. We countered with a Surprise Nite. But the thing that worried us most was how to put it on without hurting the reputation of the theatre. This was one of those towns where they used to frown at such things. We tried several different methods and finally announced the Surprise acts in between the regular acts on the bill. We left it that way for about four weeks and then we were glad to drop it entirely.

So you can see the good and the bad. These ideas are all fine if they fit into the scheme of things in your town and theatre. But if you think such an idea would get you business on an off night, then put it on the proper way and get behind it with a real publicity campaign otherwise it will die before it comes to life.

Learned—Go Slow —from A. H. Schwartz

The most interesting part of our life is the things we learn and the people we meet while in it. "We" put in almost five years with one of the cleverest showmen around New York City. He was a man who had ideas radically different from those whom you generally meet. Considering the number of "big" men I have had contact with during the many years I have been in this business, I take my hat off to A. H. Schwartz. Some of the things I learned from him stood me in good stead ever since I first knew him. And I am glad of the opportunity which I now have of expressing myself through this great medium of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

One of the first things we learned from him was—Go slow, take it easy, and don't rush. Now, there are three great expressions that should head the list of advice for every real theatre manager. So much is done foolishly in haste that we often say to ourselves how different we would do if we could but do it over again. Our candid advice to all our readers is to apply that rule in everything you do. If, in your rash moments, you want to plunge headlong into something that might involve a lot of money—or some "stunt" that should really be carefully thought out with a view of not treading on someone's toes, or in fact, anything that you want to do right, then—GO SLOW, TAKE IT EASY AND DON'T RUSH. It was a great lesson, Mr. Schwartz, and I acknowledge it here and now.

We believe we have touched upon enough subjects for one week and we are going to close until next week.

Music Week Celebrated

Clubs, Schools and Musicians Help Make Exhibitors' Efforts Highly Successful

"MUSIC WEEK" was celebrated at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., during the last three days of National Music Week in conjunction with the showing of "Easy Come Easy Go."

Musicians from three local school orchestras augmented Keese's Troubadours in such numbers as to make the personnel of the theatre orchestra total twenty-six, resulting in a volume of harmony comparable only to that produced by large symphony organizations.

Each school had a 'day' at the Tivoli; one on Thursday, another on Friday and the third on Saturday. And all played at both the matinee and evening performances. In addition to augmenting the Tivoli orchestra, certain members of the school orchestras rendered solos, such as singing and the playing of musical instruments.

Quoting from one of the local newspapers, "Since this is National Music Week, it is quite appropriate that the divine muse should hold sway and somewhat overshadow the silver sheet features; the Tivoli management thus heartily co-operating with the Chattanooga Music Club in making the week notable for enjoyable music events."

To the inspiring martial strains of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" the crimson curtains of the Tivoli part to disclose the augmented orchestra seated on four tiers of an enlarged dais beautified by rich drapes in tints of old gold and rose, giving the charm of harmony in color to the harmony of music.

Expressing appreciation for assistance given by the school principals and presidents of the three schools in making possible the elaborate program, Conductor Keese quite truly told the audience that the playing of the musicians from the orchestras of these three schools would be "a revelation" in respect to their ability, adding that the young entertainers today would be the artists of the years to come, thus meriting not only passing but permanent appreciation.

As a brilliant scenic climax to the musical program, the Troubadours gave a glimpse of Japan, wherein Keese wore the royal robes of a Mikado and the players donned mandarin headgear, a costuming quite appropriate to the ching-changing, bell-tangling, cymbal-ringing composition.

St. Petersburg, Fla.

A committee from the Carenno Club, a ladies' music organization asked Manager Roy L. Smart of the Florida Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., to run a slide for Music Week. Smart suggested that they obtain some of the best local talent available to appear on the stage to commemorate the annual affair. This they did.

On Tuesday and Wednesday nights, the High School orchestra of 24 pieces augmented by the Girls' Glee Club and a violin soloist—Christian Kirsch, the High School state championship winner appeared on the stage. The stage was dressed in green and white, the colors of the High School—using a band set. White syke, a large white and green High School banner done in colors in the center with two narrow green drapes skirting each side. One end formed a cover for the piano. The orchestra played on band parallels and the stage decorations also included two palms and two bouquets in stand vases.

Thursday night, a prominent baritone soloist did "King of the Road Am I" in Gypsy setting with four dances as an introductory number. The head of a local music school also rendered a soprano solo.

Friday night, an instrumental trip and a vocal solo. Saturday night, a ladies' quartette and vocal solo.

The musical program greatly helped business and also served as a goodwill stunt especially on the nights when the High School was represented.

The newspapers were generous with the amount of free publicity and the members of the Music Club announced the weekly program at various meetings and the members in general gave it plenty of publicity both by the written message and the word-of-mouth advertising.

Matinee Club Proves Most Effective in Toronto

To encourage juvenile patronage at matinee performances in a suburban theatre, Jules S. Wolfe of the Christie Theatre, Toronto, Canada, found a very effective feature in the form of a Christie Theatre Matinee Club. Membership cards were distributed among the child patrons and each time they attended an afternoon show their card was punched by the doorman. When the individual card has been punched 10 times, the holder is entitled to attend the theatre on the next occasion without charge by presenting the membership ticket.

The plan became so popular at the Christie that it has been adopted for all suburban theatres in Toronto of the Bloom & Fine circuit of houses.

Ontario Man Jumps Trade with Songs and Slides

C. T. Spencer of the Walker Theatre, Walkerville, Ontario, has reported that Saturday matinee business has jumped practically 100 per cent. Since the adoption of illustrated songs, community singing and amateur vocal numbers. He made it known that the latest popular songs would be introduced in Walkerville by this method and there was excellent response on the part of the young people, both in attendance and in vocal efforts.

Showmanship

Briefs

SEVERAL of the smaller Kansas City suburban theatres are finding otherwise untapped revenue during dull spring weeks by arranging, through Parent-Teacher Association groups, for children's parties at the theatres. The other day an attendance of about 200 children was on hand for two showings for feature pictures suited for children at the Bonaventure theatre. The Parent-Teacher groups of Kansas City have been unusually active—not antagonistic—in sponsoring certain types of films for children. Making a special "play" for the kids is one way of bolstering up summer business, exhibitors have concluded.

E. E. BAIR, manager of the Falls theatre, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, one of the chain of houses belonging to the Washington circuit, pulled what the civic authorities stated was "the best stunt ever seen' as one of the prime movers in the local Clean-Up-Week Campaign. Bair staged a Tin Can Parade. Every youngster from 3 years old to 16, was admitted to a free special morning matinee upon presentation of six tin cans. By the time the show opened there was a line of youngsters as far as you could see.

MONTHLY [illegible] found successful by the A. H. Blank organization, Des Moines, Iowa.

Cooperating with the Des Moines Register and Tribune and the Public Schools, each month, "birthday children," through doing certain work in school, receive a ticket to a "Movie Birthday Party."

H. Schrodt, manager of the Garden theatre, is the host to these parties.

MANY proprietors and managers are singing the praises of Manager L. E. Davidson who was responsible for their tying up on "Ramona" when that film was the feature attraction at the Capitol Theatre, Sioux City, Ia.

Every store in town that sold music was in on the tie-up.

Without exception, every store exhausted their supply of "Ramona" records and sheet music within two or three days.

MANY managers have successfully used the Coca Cola circus displays and Manager T. Y. Walker also found out that it was a good advertising medium in publicizing Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" playing at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

The Coca Cola circus displays are miniature tents with small circus wagons, horses, people, etc., placed in front. Twenty of these circus displays were on show in as many store windows with a banner underneath reading, "Charlie Chaplin in The Circus—The biggest show of mirth—Noble Theatre Monday-Tuesday-Wednesday."

MANAGER WARREN IRVIN used one of those "I do not choose to run" flivvers to ballyhoo "Thanks for the Buggy Ride" at the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The flivver was minus a top and fenders and the once good-looking runabout had a home-made rumble seat on which two well-dressed men sat.

The front seat was occupied by two of the theatre's ushers; the driver being dressed as a woman.

Perutz and Maurice, Seattle, Stage Big Tie-up on "Patent Leather Kid"

W. S. PERUTZ, manager of the United Artists Theatre in Seattle, assisted by Sam J. Maurice, advertising and exploitation man, and First National representatives in the city, got eleven days of newspaper publicity and more than 150 inches of newspaper space in one tieup for the showing of "The Patent Leather Kid."

Three definite tieups with newspapers were made.

1—A scenario contest in the Star which published the first part of the "Patent Leather Kid" scenario and offered prizes for the best endings written by its readers.

2—The Star also tied up with the picture in its insurance plan which it offers to its readers. Richard Barthelmess, star of "The Patent Leather Kid," took one of the $10,000 policies of the newspaper. The Star featured the item strongly in its "house" ads for its insurance scheme, using two pictures of Barthelmess, his name in large type clear across its ads, with the name of the picture, and a telegram from the star.

3—The Post Intelligencer ran a doughboy contest for the theatre. Prizes were offered for the best letters describing the most outstanding experience in the war of the contestants.

Girl In Window Ballyhoo Boosts Trade for "The Crowd"

A LIVING girl, advertised as "one of the crowd," did much to focus public attention on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Crowd" at the Fox Theatre, Aurora, Ill. Manager M. Berman, of the Fox Theatre, devised this and many other stunts for use in exploiting the film. He was assisted in his work by a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exploiteer.

A special tie-up was made with the Leath Department Store for a window display. The Leath store has large windows and one of these was converted into a self-containing apartment of combination kitchen-dining rooms, small living room and bedroom. The whole was boxed in with compo board on the inside, and presented the appearance of a real apartment with one glass wall the window measuring ten feet by twenty-five feet.

This apartment was made practicable, even to the cooking, and washing arrangements. An announcement was made in all theatre store advertising that "one of 'The Crowd' would live for three days in the window. To advertise this stunt three and four line teaser ads were inserted here and there throughout the paper.

A girl was obtained who—according to the news stories would live there for three days.

She cooked and ate her breakfast and luncheon in the window, in full view of the crowds streaming to work or dawdling about during lunch time. In the afternoon the girl cleaned up her 'apartment' and then went for a walk. In the evening, when people were returning from work, the girl cooked and ate her supper.

A large card was placed in the foreground of this display with the caption, "This girl is just one of 'The Crowd.' For a graphic picture of everyday life in America see 'The Crowd' at the Fox Theatre, now."

The girl did not remain in the window during theatre hours, but returned at ten in the evening and retired for the night in view of home-going theatre crowds. As soon as the girl had gone to bed the store lights were extinguished. The store watchman then let her out and she did not return until the following morning, but the newspaper stories were to the effect that she spent the entire night there. One enterprising reporter even interviewed the girl to find out how it felt to sleep with nothing but a wall of glass between one and the night crowds of the downtown section.

This stunt, so appropriate to the theme and action of King Vidor's epic of everyday life, attracted inordinate attention from passers-by, and did much to create interest in the film. The furniture store management was so pleased with the stunt that the managers of their other stores in Joliet and Elgin came to see it and requested that the same thing be put on in their stores.

Cut-Outs and Victrola Used With "Ramona"

MUSIC hath charms and so does it draw attention as was evidenced by Manager Emil Bernstecker in ballyhooing "Ramona" at the Publix Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn.

The ballyhoo consisted of a bannered Reo truck on which were cut-outs of Dolores Del Rio and an orthophonic victrola.

The truck stopped at various places throughout the city long enough to play the record "Ramona" on the orthophonic. A loud speaker attached to the victrola made the music carry farther than it would otherwise have done. This stunt always attracted a crowd. And while listening to the musical strains, they had plenty of time to read the copy about the attraction.

The ballyhoo was used the day preceding and every day during the run of picture.

Jackson Man Puts Over "Legion of Condemned"

Manager Emil Bernstecker built a miniature landing field in his lobby to advertise "Legion of the Condemned" playing at the Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn.

The miniature landing field and surrounding terrain was built out of dirt, mud and sand in one corner of the lobby. The display consisted of level stretch, hangar, toy airplanes properly painted, lake made by burying a mirror, hills covered with artificial snow and trees, derailed train in the hills, toy cattle and horses properly painted, small stream made out of mirror glass emptying into lake, figures of the characters cut from stills and mounted.

The entire display had a beaverboard back behind it which added to the appropriateness of the display in a painted scene. The title of picture, stars' names, theatre and play dates were painted on the beaverboard cyclorama.

An arrangement was made with the local D. A. R. whereby they received a 15 per cent commission on all tickets sold by them. The tickets sold by the D. A. R. were redeemed at the box office and in that way, the theatre had a close check on the whole transaction. 591 tickets were disposed of in this manner. The D. A. R. also ran a 12-inch ad telling of their arrangement with the theatre and all the members also made announcements at all the civic, social and service clubs in the city about the splendid picture and the arrangement between the D. A. R. and the theatre.

Both the lobby display and the D. A. R. tie-up were greatly helpful in putting the picture over to a big gross.

Ralph Spence to Compose for Fanchon & Marco

Because of the aggregation of big stars recently engaged, Fanchon and Marco have entered into negotiations with Ralph Spence, title writer and playwright of distinction, to compose witty dialogue for forthcoming stage presentations.

With the signing of contracts by such stars of the footlight and celluloid world as Ann Pennington, Bessie Love, Sally Rand and others, the producers of stage entertainment accompanying the showing of films are desirous of furnishing the cleverest of vehicles for their presentation.

Added to his reputation for wisecracking in the films, Spence's experience as a collaborator with Channing Pollock, Will Rogers and others in the famous Ziegfeld "Follies" and as the author of such productions as "The Gorilla," famous mystery drama, led Fanchon and Marco to seek his services in connection with their program of greater stage presentations.

Theatre Managers To Head Ball Leagues

THE important part that theatre managers have been taking in community activities in Regina, Sask., is shown by the fact that Pete Egan, manager of the Capitol Theatre, has been elected president of the Senior City Baseball League, while Jack Hunter, manager of the Regina Theatre, has been elected president of the junior baseball league.

Key City Reports

New York City

BROADWAY has still to cope with any hot weather problem and this, combined with a better than usual line-up of attractions, gave most houses a pretty good week. Even a balmy Decoration Day, Wednesday, and the usual holiday exodus, failed to cut business to an appreciable extent. The only signs of weakness came from a few of the two-a-days.

At the Paramount the strong combination of a Menjou picture, "His Tiger Lady" and the Paul Ash presentation, gave the big Publix theatre a very good week. In fact, business was well up to Winter standard and honors for the draw were about even between picture and presentation. But, as predicted in this column, there can be no doubt about Ash having arrived in this town.

One of the best bets in New York at present is "Tempest," at the Embassy, where the Barrymore-del Rio picture grossed $11,871 in its third week at this small house. The figures for the first two weeks were over capacity and the third showed an increase of $344 over the second. Its a U. A. picture and this company also claims that their "Ramona" has shattered records at the Rivoli on its third and fourth week ends. At the Rialto, "Street of Sin" (Par) also rolled up a good week's business, as does most any Emil Jannings picture at this house. Whether or not it was as good as some other Jannings films seemed not to make any difference. Jannings trade has been established at the Rialto.

The Capitol did a very good week's trade with Lon Chaney's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" and again it was a case of strong Chaney intrenchment at this house for this, too, was criticized for not being quite up to marks set by other Chaney pictures. But, good enough anyway for the Capitol to hold over for another week, and that means something. The Roxy had just another Fox program picture, "The News Parade" and again the Rothafel presentation helped things along to a mediocre showing. Some of the Fox specials will go in within a few weeks and these are looked for to boost trade in anticipation of the Summer letdown—which will surely come if this big house doesn't get stronger fare.

As stated in last week's Motion Picture News, "Abie's Irish Rose" will be let out of the 44th Street theatre the middle of June. "Abie" will be treated for its ailment at Paramount's Long Island studios where sound picture apparatus is being installed, it having been decided that a voice will revive this Irish-Jewish film. Since its arrival at the 44th Street, "Abie" has taken a bad licking for the simple reason that the town is fed up on this sort of theme.

The Strand played the final week before going "Talkie" with "Lady, Be Good" (F. N.) and another of the Stanley shows and an average Strand week was the result. "Tenderloin" (W. B.) will inaugurate the talkies—to be followed by others.

Among the specials old daddy "Wings" continues to keep its head up at the Criterion, nearing a year's run and predictions are that this film will be kept through the Summer months. The Astor, with "The Trail of '98," felt a slight depression—but nothing to worry about. It will undoubtedly be on the Street for several more weeks. Fox's "Four Sons' moved out of the Gaiety to make room for "Fazil," a new Movietoned Fox film—but it was time for "Four Sons" to go, anyway. Its run has been fair. Another Fox film, "Street Angel," continues at a very fair pace at the Globe.

Russian, German and English films were also along the Rialto. "The End of St. Petersburg" at Hammerstein's appealing to local newspaper critics and many citizens from the Bronx, Brownsville and the East Side. It did well. The Times Square had the much publicized Edith Cavell picture "Dawn" and business was fair enough. The German entry, "Youth Astray," at the Cameo, trailed the trio of foreign pictures.

At Warner's, "Glorious Betsy" (W. B.) continues to demonstrate the popularity of talkies.

Minneapolis

"SIMBA," Martin Johnson's jungle picture, was shown at the Metropolitan theatre last week as a roadshow, and did a good business, especially among the school children.

Emil Jannings, in "The Street of Sin," proved to have only average drawing power at the Minnesota. Many persons, including all the local critics, thought this excellent picture deserved capacity houses. The stage attraction was the Publix unit show, "Steps and Steppers."

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh," with Lon Chaney, attracted good crowds to the State, while "Diamond Handcuffs," at the Lyric, did about the usual business.

Pantages featured Tom Mix in "Hello, Cheyenne," and this picture drew well, as Mix pictures always do.

"Skinner's Big Idea" was the photoplay attraction at the Hennepin-Orpheum, but most of the movie fans came to see Mary Kornman, Johnny Downs and "Scooter" Lowry of "Our Gang" fame.

Among the neighborhood houses, the Arion and Rialto made a nice showing with "Speedy," while the Lagoon, Lyndale, Loring and American were exhibiting such pictures as "The Crowd," "Old Ironsides," "Across to Singapore" and "The Girl from Chicago" with good results. About the only real opposition the movies had was Edith Taliaferro in "The Garden of Eden," at the Shubert theatre.

Atlanta

COMEDY reigned high on Atlanta bills last week bringing some good box-offices in for the theatres.

"Why Sailors Go Wrong," a Fox opus with Sammy Cohen and Ted McNamara sent the Capitol home with a good leap.

Rod LaRocque at the Howard in "Hold 'Em Yale," plus special advertisement inducive to the college contingent, drew well for that house.

Next door Loew's Grand enjoyed a fair week with "Becky," comedy romance with Sally O'Neil.

At Keith's Georgia, Leatrice Joy in "The Blue Danube" was proclaimed with high accord. This picture drew much attention from the critics.

The Rialto enjoyed a fine week with "Chicago After Midnight" synchronized with Vitaphone. Movietone newsreel has not yet ceased to cast its marvelous spell over the audience.

"The Tragedy of Youth" brought the Metropolitan a fair week.

Three fast numbers, "Ride 'Em High," "Thunder Riders," and "Red Riders of Canada" gathered a good box-office for the Tudor.

Philadelphia

WITH a week of sunshine and warmer weather, Philadelphia first run theatres, with one or two exceptions, began to feel the effects of the arrival of summer outdoor amusements.

There was a noticeable falling off in the usual line up after the first show at the Stanley, with Adolphe Menjou in "A Night of Mystery," and a "Jazz Carnival" with Buddy Page as master of ceremonies.

There were also some vacant seats at the Fox with "A Thief in the Dark" and an elaborate and entertainnig stage presentation, "Syncopation Gayeties," with Flo Perry as mistress of ceremonies.

"Simba," a remarkable collection of motion pictures of animal life in the African Jungle, taken by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson on their expedition, which is being shown twice daily at the Garrick, is full of thrills and is the most interesting of the new films.

The Carman, with the Philadelphia premiere of "Matinee Idol," featuring Bessie Love, and a "Comedy Frolic," in which laughter is the keynote, seemed to strike the pouular fancy of uptown audiences.

"Across to Singapore," with Ramon Novarro, proved a fairly good drawing card at the Karlton.

"Street Angel" closed a very satisfactory engagement at the Fox-Locust, to be succeeded by the Fox production, "Mother Machree," featuring Victor McLaglen and Bessie Love.

"The Patent Leather Kid" continues its popular priced presentation at the Stanton.

"Hangman's House" held up well in its second week at the Victoria.

"Old San Francisco," with Dolores Costello and Vitaphone accompaniment, is in its final week at the Aldine.

The Palace, with Lon Chaney in "The Big City," and the Capitol, with Estelle Taylor in "The Whip Woman," had average weeks.

Boston

MORE than two weeks of rain with a consequent delay of half a month in straw hat weather boosted box office receipts for local theatres and continued to keep New England theatres well above last season's gross business.

"The Drag Net" was the film at the Metropolitan which played to highly satisfactory business. Jene Rodemich and the stage band continued their popularity.

Loew's State with "The Patsy" did one of the best week's business for late Spring in years. Harry Fox & Co. made up the presentation. Loew's Orpheum presented "The Enemy" for a better than average business.

"Sailors Wives" was the film at the Scollay Square Olympia and reports of satisfactory business for the entire week.

Keith-Albee Boston's showing of "Midnight Madness" proved one of the best box office attractions in weeks.

Modern and Beacon, the twin theatres, played a heavy week's gross with the double features, "The Blue Danube" and "Sunset Legion."

Other theatres reporting satisfactory receipts are the Capitol, which has recently been acquired by Publix, with "Dressed to Kill," the University with "The Circus" and "Three Sinners," the Exeter with "The Heart of a Follies Girl" and "A Night of Mystery," and the Bowdoin Square with "The Garden of Eden" and "The Smart Set."

Cleveland

A WEEK of cool weather, a series of good pictures, and a holiday thrown in for good measure, brought the average picture business up above normal for this season of the year.

"Drums of Love," beautiful and artistic production, done in Griffith's best style, was given added interest by a contest for a new ending to the story with a $50 reward for the best ending submitted.

The Allen had good business all week and very big holiday business with "A Certain Young Man," amusing, sophisticated, society drama, as the feature attraction.

"The Yellow Lily," unusually interesting presentation of the romantic love between a royal lover and his sweetheart who is not royal, appealed strongly to the public and attracted full houses. A new twist to an old story made "Diamond Handcuffs" interesting to comfortably large audiences at the State. "The Big Noise" was very well liked at Keith's East 105th Street theatre, and played to a very nice business for the week. Good satire, very well done. Reade's Hippodrome reports average success with "The Sporting Age" as the feature attraction, an interesting domestic drama made distinctive by Belle Bennett's work.

The Park did a whale of a business last week under the new split-week policy. Pictures both the first half and the last half were first-run neighborhood releases. "Ramona" the fore part and "The Crowd" the last half both packed the theatre.

The Cameo played a second downtown run of "Ramona" with satisfactory results.

Neighborhood houses report that business is decidedly poor.

Kansas City

A WEEK of rain failed to make much difference in the week's attendance at first run theatres of Kansas City, the attendance remaining "just fair," as it has been for the last several weeks.

At Loew's Midland, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho" drew a fair attendance, which also was the case with George Bancroft in "The Drag Net" at the Newman.

At the Liberty a revival of Rudolph Valentino in "The Son of the Sheik" drew exceptionally good, as did "A Thief in the Dark" at the Pantages.

"Vamping Venus" at the Mainstreet also showed a slight increase in attendance, while "Powder My Back" at the Globe drew average crowds.

Nothing exceptional in the way of exploitation was employed by any of the theatres, aside from increased newspaper advertising space by Loew's Midland.

Buffalo

ONLY fair box office receipts rewarded the theatres here last week for some pretty good entertainment. The advent of belated spring weather, which was the signal for the beginning of pleasure motor trips, and the Memorial Day holiday which gave hundreds of persons an opportunity to make out-of-town trips coupled with the opening of the beaches and summer resorts on Decoration Day, all combined to cheat the theatres out of the patronage warranted by the calibre of programs they offered.

Shea's Buffalo had a fairly good week with an excellent stage presentation, "Rah! Rah! Rah!", featuring the well-known 370-pound Johnny Perkins, and the latest Wallace Beery-Raymond Hatton comedy on the screen, "Partners in Crime."

The usual Hippodrome partisans visited this theatre to see an excellent bill, with Adolphe Menjou starring in the picture, "A Night of Mystery," and a Keith-Albee vaudeville program headlined by Harry Kahne.

The Great Lakes celebrated its first birthday anniversary with eight acts of vaudeville headlined by Paul Specht and his orchestra, and "We Americans" on the silver sheet. The anniversary program was highly exploited, especially a huge birthday cake that was placed in the lobby, and the customers responded in good numbers. Loew's State had "Gold Chevrons" on the screen, with Private Clayton K. Slack, Congressional medal hero, in person, as the bait, but the box office receipts were not up to expectations. A good vaudeville bill also was offered. Loew's closed down Saturday until fall when it will be reopened under a new name and new management, the local holding company and the Marcus Loew Booking Agency having come to the parting of the ways.

The Lafayette didn't fare as well last week with "The Lion and the Mouse," a talking picture, as it had the week before, but then the second week's returns seldom equal the first week's when a picture is held over for a couple of weeks. Five acts of vaudeville accompanied the program.

Seattle

ANOTHER week of mediocre business among the first run houses, with no outstanding films, except "Wings," which opened a road show engagement at the Metropolitan theatre playing twice a day at $1.65 top to average gross only. The film has been highly praised and is doing slightly better than the usual road show, due somewhat to advertising to the effect that the film will not appear in any other Seattle theatre for a year.

"Easy Come, Easy Go" was the screen attraction at the Seattle theatre and it was one of the most disappointing films to play this big house since its opening in March. Boris Petroff's beautiful Publix stage show, "Tick Tock," and a good musical setting by Jules Buffano's stage band and Arthur Clauson's grand orchestra were the highlights of the bill, which was a distinct failure from the film standpoint. Business was noticeably below normal.

At the Fifth Avenue theatre, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" was received in a half-hearted manner. The star is popular here, but the story has been overworked in its theme, and it was not considered much of a film by the public. Fanchon-Marco's "Dance Paintings" on the stage was highly acceptable, and the Klein Brothers were an added factor in the stage show. It was a fair week only.

"Tenderloin" played its third and final week at Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre and succeeded in filling the house nicely all week, although the film was not particularly strong. It was far from a second "Jazz Singer" in box office value, but was a successful picture when the three-week total is considered. A fairly strong week for the finish.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was brought back to "U's" Columbia theatre for a week, but it was not much of a success, hardly denting the surface of the theatre-going public. The week was very slack.

"Valley of the Giants," at the United Artists theatre, was another unsuccessful film that was noticeably below par from every standpoint. The real hit of the bill was the Laurel-Hardy comedy, "You're Darn Tootin'." Even this, though, couldn't make a good show all alone, so the box office was very weak as a result.

"Honor Bound," at Pantages was fairly well received, but "Alex, The Great," at the Orpheum, was decidedly unpopular, and the vaudeville programs at both houses were just fair.

"Once and Forever," at the Embassy, and "Ladies Only," at the Winter Garden, were fair attractions. Altogether, the week was poor.

Canada

ALL of the leading theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, were popularly credited with having excellent film entertainment during the week of May 28, and, this fact, coupled with timely rain showers almost every day, made box-office returns highly satisfactory in practically every instance. A national holiday on May 24, Victoria Day, also helped to swell attendance figures. Radio reception has been terrible as well, so that most families have folded up their "hope chests" for the summer, and are finding recreation in shows or motoring.

It was generally agreed that "Three Sinners," at B. F. Keith's Theatre, was the best of recent pictures in which Pola Negri has starred. Manager Franklin was told by a large number of patrons that they liked the film.

"Across to Singapore" is a two-fisted feature. It is not often that adult crowds applaud at the Regent Theatre, but there were outbursts of applause all week for this one.

"The Crowd" is extraordinary in its theme and treatment. Here is a picture with real acting, human interest and plenty of laughs and sobs. Everybody said so after seeing it at the Imperial. Big crowds too.

Billie Dove was literally as pretty as a picture in "The Yellow Lily" at the Centre Theatre. In fact, she was most of the picture because the story was similar to many others of its type. Patronage was steady all during the week.

"Rose-Marie" took better at the Rex Theatre, a neighborhood house, than it did at the downtown Regent some weeks ago— probably because fewer people knew the stage play. "Blake of Scotland Yard" is a serial that has many followers here.

"Stolen Bride" was a strong attraction at the Fern and Billie Dove was 60 per cent of the attraction. Packed houses also enjoyed "Atta Baby," comedy, and a chunk of "Melting Millions."

"Smilin' at Trouble," with Lefty Flynn, is the kind of a picture they like at the Columbia and Manager Nolan likes it too for box-office reasons.

St. Louis

AVERAGE business for the season was enjoyed generally by the first run and neighborhood houses of St. Louis and vicinity during the week.

A survey indicated that employment is somewhat on the increase due to such seasonal activities as building construction, road building, etc., while in Southern Illinois coal mining is looking up.

At Skouras Brothers Ambassador Theatre the screen attraction was Emil Jannings in "The Street of Sin," and it did not go over so big as some of this star's former offerings. Perhaps he is being offered too much in exactly the same type of picture.

At the Missouri Theatre a new personality was offered on the stage in the person of Frank Fay, and for that reason there was somewhat of an increase in the attendance among the younger element of the community. The screen offering was Billie Dove in "The Yellow Lily." Local critics had some good things to say about it.

At the St. Louis Theatre, Jacqueline Logan in "Broadway Daddies" was on the screen. Miss Frankie Heath was the vaudeville headliner. Business was up to standard.

Loew's State offered on its screen Gilda Gray in "The Devil Dancer" and the fair star was there in person to help draw them into the cash seats. Judging from the attendance at the various performances she knows this art to the 'nth degree.

Grand Central's Vitaphone offering was "Glorious Betsy" while Al Jolson headed the Vitaphone short subjects bill.

New Orleans

DOWNTOWN first run theatre business showed much improvement in New Orleans during the past week as compared with previous weeks. Excellent summer weather prevailed and crowds flocked to the houses, all of which are equipped with elaborate cooling plants.

At Loew's State Theatre, where the best business of the week was noted, George Bancroft was featured in "The Drag Net," one of the best films to play this house in months. Coupled with five acts of vaudeville Loew's State business spurted, but it was the screen feature that brought them.

Theatregoers who saw "The Street of Sin," featuring Emil Jannings, at the new Saenger Theatre, went away well pleased. The publix stage show was better than usual but credit for whatever business this house did goes to the film.

"The Escape" with Virginia Valli, was the Orpheum attraction, and proved a highly entertaining photoplay. Five high class acts were on the bill also and this aided in bringing patrons to the University Place house.

At the Strand Theatre "Diamond Handcuffs," with an all star cast, was the offering but the picture didn't fare so well. The Globe showed "Husbands for Rent" and was well liked. Business was good. The Trianon presented "Across the Pacific," with Monte Blue, and despite the fact that the film had its premiere locally at the Liberty, drew well.

Neighborhood houses also report an increase in attendance.

The signing of the Mississippi flood control bill by President Coolidge seems to have added new life to the city. For more than two months previous to the signing of the bill a spell of depression prevailed here and theatre business suffered heavily. Managers look forward to a steadily growing business from now on.

Albany

DECORATION Day saved the situation in Albany and Troy last week, and instead of the week being one of small profits, the crowds flocking to the motion picture theatres on Decoration Day, due to weather conditions, brought the week to the right side of the ledger.

The Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany reported the biggest business done on Decoration Day of any Decoration Day in the history of the two houses. The remainder of the week was characterized by only fair business at practically every theatre in the two cities of Albany and Troy. Had Decoration Day been pleasant, last week would have been one which would have cost more than one house a handsome penny.

The Leland used "Paid to Love" throughout the week, but the second show of the evening was the only one to pack the theatre. In connection with the feature, the Leland also used local pictures showing the opening of Albany's airport.

The Mark Strand played to just fair business throughout the week with "The Street of Sin," coupled with Vitaphone presentations. The business on Decoration Day, however, was of smashing proportions and served to bring up the week's average in splendid shape. The Clinton Square theatre, using first run double features, including "The Play Girl" and "Hello, Cheyenne" reported business as being good throughout the week, but admitting that Decoration Day was the saving feature.

At the Mark Ritz, in Albany, "Fools for Luck" ran consistently fair. Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, using vaudeville as well as a perfect girl contest, together with pictures, reported business as a little above fair. Proctor's Grand, in Albany, captured the crowds the first three days of the week with Peaches Browning, cutting heavily into the motion picture theatres.

Film salesmen covering northern New York, returning to headquarters on Saturday, reported that exhibitors generally in the smaller cities and villages are complaining over business.

In Troy, the Lincoln split the week with "The Devil Dancer" going over heavy the fore part of the week. "The Legion of the Condemned" did only fair in a split week at owing to conditions generally Proctor's the last three days, showed some improvement.

Business is not good, however, in Troy, owing to conditions generally. "Proctor's used "Wickedness Preferred," along with its regular program of vaudeville.

Cincinnati

CINCINNATI houses have been getting bad breaks for the last several weeks, and the past seven days did not add anything to the intake that would give exhibitors much cause for hilarity.

The Capitol, with Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," aided and abetted by Vitaphone and Movietone, had the best business of any of the houses, although it was not necessary to call out the traffic squad to keep the crowds back. The picture is being held over for a second week, with the hope that the first week's record may be duplicated.

"Rose-Marie" at the Lyric did only a fair business, due, probably, to the fact that the piece has been in Cincinnati several times in musical form, and the customers were probably fed up on it.

Bebe Daniels in the "Fifty-Fifty Girl" at the Albee, where presentation acts also hold sway, got off to a bad start, and that's how business remained for the balance of the engagement.

The Keith Theatre, with "Sharpshooters," managed to pull an average attendance, but nothing at all to brag about.

Fred Thomson in "The Sunset Legion" at the Strand failed to click, and the same can also be said of "Coney Island," first half at the Family, and "The Sporting Age" last half. The two halves at this house didn't make anything like a decent whole.

The Palace, vaudeville and pictures, did not pile up a record gross by any means. This house seems to be suffering from opposition of the Albee, which is in the same chain.

No particular reason can be assigned for the slump, which was also experienced by the amusement parks, although they had unfavorable weather against them.

Indianapolis

BUSINESS was only fair in Indianapolis movies last week. Managers reported a noticeable loss of business as result of the daylight saving time adopted by most theatres a week ago. The extra hour was taken advantage of by many folks who sought other sources of entertainment. Thousands here Wednesday for the Memorial Day 50 mile auto race failed to help business.

Emil Jannings in "The Street of Sin" did fair business at the Indiana, leading downtown houses for the week.

Dolores Del Rio in "Ramona" at Loew's Palace did moderately well, business being pepped up by a "Ramona chorus contest."

Business at the Circle picked up some because of local interest in Dick Powell, new master of ceremonies, succeeding Eddie Pardo. Pardo spent six weeks as director of the stage band but failed to obtain satisfactory business results.

William Haines in "The Smart Set" did satisfactory business at the New Fountain Square. The new neighborhood house seems to have "caught on" neighborhood business.

Neighborhood houses have had light afternoon business with better results at evening performances.

Baltimore

DECORATION DAY coming in the middle of the week beginning Monday, May 28, helped business at the first run theatres here considerably.

The best business of the week was probably done at the Keith-Albee New Garden Theatre, where "We Americans," starring George Sidney, was presented on the same bill with six acts of Keith-Albee high class vaudeville, the headliner being Mr. Sidney in person.

Through the week the attendance was particularly strong and it was regarded as one of the best weeks the New Garden has had since it reopened last December.

At Loew's Valencia, "The Legion of the Condemned," featuring Gary Cooper and Fay Wray, went over better during its second week there than it did during the first. This is attributed to the fact that practically all who saw the production liked it and went away pleased, thus bringing many others into the house. A great many considered this air picture greater than "Wings."

At the Little Theatre, operated by the Motion Picture Guild, "Czar Ivan, the Terrible," made by Sovkino of Russia, proved an excellent patron puller, and business there was excellent every day. This picture was helped by advertisements in all foreign publications in Baltimore.

During the second week of its engagement at Warners' Metropolitan "Glorious Betsy," starring Dolores Costello and Conrad Nagel, with Vitaphone dialogue and music and other Vitaphone attractions did so well that it was held for a third week.

Good houses were the rule throughout the week at the Stanley, where "The Yellow Lily," starring Billie Dove, was the feature film attraction, on the same bill with a stage presentation act Venetian Nights with Sammy Kaufman and his stage band, and other vaudeville headliners.

"The Dragnet," co-starring George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent, proved a good attraction throughout the entire week on the bill at Loew's Century, with Bowery Follies featuring Ted Claire and his orchestra and other vaudevillians.

Keith's Hippodrome had a fairly good week with "The Desert Bride," starring Betty Compson and five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville on the same bill.

But business only went along fairly well at the New Theatre with "Why Sailors Go Wrong," co-starring Sammy Cohen and Ted McNamara.

Tampa

THE unusual slump in the show business last week was attributed to the Democratic primaries. Meetings nightly and picnics daily pulled good crowds, while the theatres, with excellent programs that should pull, found the going tough.

There is one exception, however, and that one is the Victory, which held up great, with "Glorious Betsy" and the Vitaphone and Movietone, closing a run of ten straight days to excellent business.

The Tampa had a good show the first half with "The Big Killing" featured. Ordinarily this Beery and Hatton team would have made a killing, but the show went over to just ordinary returns. The last half wasn't any better with "Diamond Handcuffs" featured.

The Strand had three excellent programs. "Something Always Happens" was great. "The Heart of a Follies Girl" and "Wall Flowers" both good, but business just so-so.

The same may be said for the Franklin which brought back "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Burning Daylight" for second showings, and "After The Storm" and "Drifting Sands" for first runs.

Dallas

THE Dallas theatres checked off an average week's business the past seven days with no big grosses, but attendance was consistent and no red ink was necessary. Since the advent of hot weather the early shows are off but the later performances are heavier giving practically the same averages.

"Across to Singapore," with Ramon Novarro and Joan Crawford brought the Melba a nice attendance and the weekly report was a little above the average. The Melba is gradually settling on a firm basis and business is less erratic which shows that a patronage is being acquired.

At the Majestic, "Dressed to Kill," with Edmund Lowe and Mary Crawford and a good Interstate vaudeville bill secured the largest business of any of the first run houses although business was not big. A great deal of good publicity was expended on the bill as it was appreciation week.

Business at the Palace where "The Street of Sin" with Emil Jannings was being shown, fell below the usual Palace business, and failed to bring forth favorable comment. The Publix presentation failed to help out.

"The Blue Danube" starring Leatrice Joy, brought good receipts for the week to the Old Mill, and continued to hold up the good business secured last week.

At the Capitol "Love Me and the World Is Mine" with Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin brought a little below the average Capitol attendance, but was well liked.

At the Arcadia "Serenade" with Adolphe Menjou, and Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" brought forth large crowds for the entire week, which is not out of the ordinary for this theatre.

Baltimore

(Previous Week)

WHAT might be called fairly good business was enjoyed by the first-run theatres here during the week beginning Monday, May 21. But the best business for the week was done at Warners' Metropolitan where "Glorious Betsy," starring Dolores Costello, with Vitaphone accompaniment and dialogue and other Vitaphone acts on the same bill, did a whale of a business and turned them away throughout the week.

Pictures with Vitaphone dialogue, singing, accompaniment and sounds, have taken a strong hold on the people here which has been proved also by the success of the two previous Vitaphone features "Tenderloin" and "The Jazz Singer."

"Across to Singapore," with Ramon Novarro, Joan Crawford, and Ernest Torrence, proved a very good pulling attraction at Loew's Century with the Kat Kabaret on the same bill with Ted Claire, his orchestra and other vaudeville headliners.

The Keith-Albee New Garden theatre, where seven acts of high class Keith-Albee vaudeville were presented with a feature picture, "Beyond London's Lights" started out with fair patronage and gradually rose to very good for the last three days of the week.

"The Legion of the Condemned" featuring Gary Cooper and Fay Wray, proved a surprise, for everybody who saw it seemed to like it immensely, and had only praise for this picture which is a follower of Wings. A good business was done throughout the week and in some instances people called it better than Wings.

The reissued version of "Peter Ibbetson," co-featuring Wallace Reid and Elsie Ferguson which was released in 1921 as "Forever," did a good business at the Little Theatre, operated by the Motion Picture Guild, where it was shown for a week, and patronage held up very well during that time.

"A Woman Against the World," featuring Harrison Ford and Georgia Hale, was the film attraction at the Hippodrome with five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville on the same bill. Business held up there good through the week, and was very good on Saturday.

The Stanley theatre did not go over so well with "The Gorilla," people in many instances remembering the thrills of the stage play which the motion picture version does not possess. Jazz Carnival, a stage presentation act, was offered on the same bill with Sammy Kaufman and his orchestra and other vaudeville headliners.

The Gainsborough British production of "The Rat" with Ivor Novello and Mae Marsh was offered at the New Theatre and did a fair business which might be considered better than business which has been done lately at that playhouse. Alphonse Berg's Parisian revue and Maury Leaf were offered in a stage presentation act.

Milwaukee

THE Memorial Day holiday in the middle of the week helped down town theatres to boost receipts for the week and succeeded in bringing business quite a bit above average. Business was very brisk for the week-end and on the extra holiday in spite of the beautiful mild weather.

"Ramona" at the Garden packed the house and is being held over for a second week. "Harold Teen" brought in very gratifying business to the Wisconsin. The Merrill featuring "Circus Rookies" was fairly well attended. "Thanks for the Buggy Ride" at the Alhambra succeeded in keeping the house very well filled. "Three Sinners" played to capacity houses at the Strand.

Neighborhood theatres found business rather slack throughout the week. Business was far more active in the down town theatres than it was on the outskirts. "The Whip Woman" was featured at the five Midwesco pre-release houses and at all business was just fair. "Blonde for a Night" was well attended at the Venetian. "Old Iron-Sides" made a fair bid for popularity at the Egyptian.

Chicago

GOOD business on the Memorial Day holiday helped boost the box office gross for the past week in Chicago theatres, where mid-week attendance has been far from satisfactory for some time past, particularly in the neighborhood houses.

Three long run theatres in the loop are changing programs this week end after doing fair to excellent business with their present offerings for some weeks.

"Sadie Thompson," which has proved a strong drawing card at the United Artists, makes way for the latest Del Rio feature, "Ramona."

"The Street of Sin," ends its good run at McVickers, where "The Good Bye Kiss" opens Sunday, and "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" yields the screen to "The Drag Net," a detective-thriller, at the Roosevelt.

The Chicago program including "The Yellow Lily" as its screen feature, Lou Holz in person in a stage production Araby, and Spitalny's patriotic musical feature, brought in good business.

"Harold Teen," was the feature at the Oriental with Mark Fisher and his stage band in Here Comes the Bride, attendance being satisfactory.

"Sorrell and Son" was the screen attraction at both the Tivoli and Uptown Theatres. Bennie Krueger and his band, Ross Cropper in person, and other stage specialties made up a particularly strong stage bill at the Uptown, where business was good. The Tivoli also had a satisfactory week.

Another feature being shown simultaneously at two big houses was "Don't Marry," which was the screen attraction at the Granada and Marbro. Big programs, including Movietone and Vitaphone, were offered at both theatres and attendance was good.

San Francisco

BECAUSE of abnormal weather conditions, business generally in the motion picture theatres was not as good as it should have been. It has been discovered that when a heavy wind blows, and the sky is cloudy, that people desire to stay at home and not visit either first run, down-town, or residential theatres. Although the residential theatres do better business in proportion than others, as the people visit those close to their homes.

Loew's Warfield theatre did the biggest business of the week of any theatre with the picture, "Steamboat Bill, Jr.,, which was shown together with "The Diving Venus," a Fanchon & Marco idea, and the orchestra stunts.

The Granada theatre did fairly well with "The Drag Net," on its screen, and "Fast Mail," a Publix Revue stunt.

"The Circus," held over another week at the St. Francis theatre, did not draw well, and the picture was not popular.

Poor box office receipts were reported at the California theatre even though the bill was long. The picture shown was "Hell-ship Bronson," considered a good one.

"Sailors' Wives," together with vaudeville acts, at the Golden Gate theatre, did well, and the Union Square theatre reported good business with "Fangs of the Wild," "Tie That Bull" and "The Haunted Ship."

"Tenderloin," shown for a third time at the Embassy theatre, did fairly well, but not nearly what was contemplated.

Among the residential and second run theatres none reported better business than the Coliseum, which was filled when "Feel My Pulse" and a popular act were shown, and the picture, "Chicago," together with good music, crowded the Alexandria.

Harrisburg, Pa.

BY all odds the best patronized picture of the week in Harrisburg was "The Patent Leather Kid," starring Richard Barthelmess, at the Colonial. Manager Lee Levy, of the theatre, had advertised it well in advance as "a $2.20 per seat road show at usual prices." The theatre was crowded the first day and the film took hold immediately with the Harrisburg fans, with the result that each night witnessed standing room.

Some other first run attractions did conspicuously less business. Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, in "The Big Killing," did only fairly well at the Victoria, while at Loew's Regent, where the feature film was Norma Shearer in "The Actress," there were some nights when many seats were empty.

On the other hand, the State had a successful week, the film attraction for the first half of which was "If I Were Single," with May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel. The vaudeville side of the State's program headlined Franklyn Farnum, screen and stage star.

On Tuesday the Russell theatre offered a double feature bill, consisting of Karl Dane and George K. Arthur in "Rookies," and Gilda Gray in "The Devil Dancer." This proved to be a paying combination.

Generally speaking, there was a falling off of movie patronage, which was considered seasonable, however, due to the opening of many outdoor amusements starting with Memorial Day, May 30. The Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey circus showed in Harrisburg May 29. This probably helped rather than hurt the movies, however, as it attracted lots of out-of-town people who patronized both the pictures and the circus.

Opinions on Pictures

The Drag Net

Interesting Melodrama Here

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

EVER since "Underworld" created such a stir in producers and exhibitors' circles (to say nothing of the public) more than one company has tried to duplicate it. The results have been fairly successful, though the original still stands in a class by itself. However, the sponsors needn't be ashamed of the new release. It was directed by von Sternberg, the same man who had charge of "Underworld," and so, of course, he knew what he was shooting at. Incidentally, he has turned out a film which packs away the customary number of thrills.

The plot goes right down to the underworld for its action and unfolds some tense situations. Moreover it has George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent portraying characters not a great deal unlike their roles in "Underworld." The story gets real "intrikut," what with its theme projecting three murders. The central figure is a detective chief who is framed for murder when he attempts to round up a gang of crooks. Be it said for the "bull"—he gets his men. The piece is atmospheric and is acted with sufficient intensity to keep one's pulse active. It will satisfy.

Drawing Power: Suitable for any type of house. Exploitation Angles: Feature cast and bill as companion picture to "Underworld."

THEME: Melodrama of underworld with gang trying to frame detective.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, six reels. Released, June, 1928. Cast: George Bancroft, William Powell, Fred Kohler, Evelyn Brent, Francis MacDonald, Leslie Fenton. Director, Josef von Sternberg.

Fazil

Super Romance-Colorful and Interesting

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

STEAMING passion on the white hot sands—that's "Fazil," which projects Charles Farrell in the regalia of a sheik and thrusts him into a torrid romance. And the way he conducts himself indicates that he's qualified to show a few of the boys how passion should be registered. He takes the hurdle from sweet sentiment in a Paris garret ("Seventh Heaven"—you know) to burning ardor on the desert—and takes it with ease and surety.

This "Fazil" is a version of the East versus West theme—with Farrell playing an Arab chieftain who marries a sprightly Parisienne. Once she gets a taste of the monotony of the desert, life begins to pall on her. So she rebels, and in doing so precipitates a quarrel. The Arab leaves her to return to his dear desert where he establishes a harem. Eventually such a state of affairs makes her jealous, with the result that she comes back to him and compels the dusky maids to exit. In the end he is shot by her rescuers, but before he dies he poisons his wife. And they pass out together.

This is the plot, which is simple enough, but which holds the attention through the colorful incident, the red-hot love-making and the atmospheric backgrounds. It is a highly seasoned romance and capitally acted by Farrell and Greta Nissen.

Drawing Power: Farrell has a following. Suitable for every type of house. Women should love it. Exploitation Angles: Play up Farrell and Nissen. Billed as red-hot romance of desert sands, it should turn 'em away.

THEME: Romantic drama of Arab married to Parisienne.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, eight reels. Released, June, 1928. Cast: Charles Farrell, Greta Nissen, Mae Busch, Tyler Brooke, Eddie Sturgis, Josephine Borio, John Boles, John T. Murray. Director, Howard Hawks.

Don't Marry

A Trifling Tidbit—Just So-So

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A SLIGHT tid-bit of romance comes right out into the open here and makes its bow, and all things considered it will probably entertain the young folks during moments of its brief hour. There's nothing to it, and most of the interest is centered around Lois Moran in a bathing suit—and some fairly bright captions. It could be condensed into three reels and not miss a thing. The plot is extremely slender and gives itself away as early as the second reel. Thus to keep it going the director resorts to padding it full of repetitious incident.

The story expands around the effort of a very modern flapper to convince a youth with mid-Victorian ideas that the old-fashioned girl is hopeless these days. He had frowned on Miss Flapper when she blows volumes of cigarette smoke in his face. So she masquerades as her antique "sister"—one given to playing the harp and dressing a la early nineties. After she makes a fool of him by parading around in such finery and talking an equally old-fashioned language, he is willing to accept the flapper. And that's all there is to it. Miss Moran makes a pleasing picture and acts her part with good shading. But the film is mostly a walking effort—the characters walking on and off the sets and scenery. It's just a movie, and not a very good one.

Drawing Power: Title has some appeal. Suitable for program houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up Lois Moran and feature her in bathing attire. Play up Neil Hamilton. Bill as romance of youth and summertime.

THEME: Romance of flapper who convinces youth that old-fashioned ideas of dress and deportment aren't so hot.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, six reels. Released, May, 1928.

The Strange Case of Captain Ramper

Good Idea, But Botchy Picture—Not For the Box Office

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GERMAN importation bobs up in this one, and it can't be handed much. A good idea is lost in the slip-shod method of producing it, and it sloughs off into a lot of mawkish sentimentality. Moreover, its central character is not sympathetic enough as portrayed by Paul Wegener, the Teuton who some may remember in the title role of "The Golem."

The picture has been extensively ballyhooed, but it doesn't live up to its notices. Its idea is fantastic and had it been treated with more imagination it might have proved a sensation. But it misses fire and has very little to recommend it.

Wegener plays an ape man, one who reverts to type when his plane is wrecked in the Arctic. His mechanic (the weaker of the two) succumbs, and Ramper, left to eke out an existence, loses his power of speech and his mind ceases to function beyond the instinctive processes. He also grows a thick coat of fur. Several years later whaling men rescue him and sell him to a side-show. Eventually he recovers his erstwhile talents, but is so disgusted at the human picture that he gladly returns to the Arctic.

Such a character as portrayed here wins little sympathy, not even when the side-showman's sister brings him to an awakening of himself.

Drawing Power: Has none at all except what you give it as something off beaten path. Suitable for houses which have extensive program. Exploitation Angles: Play up theme and star. Send question teasers asking if it is possible for a human to revert to lowest type of animal life.

Length, seven reels. Released, June, 1928.

"Sailor Boy"

(Educational One Reel)

THERE is something funny in the countenance of Monty Collins which provokes merriment even before he energetically swings into the fast-moving rhythm of these Cameo comedies and proceeds to hand out his gag material with a deft and effective touch. Educational discovered a [illegible] signed Collins and starred him in these Cameos. He's rising rapidly and carving his own little [illegible]. His latest, "Sailor Boy," is chock full of speedy stuff, and is calculated to set the fans alaughing.

Monty, attired [illegible] in a gob's outfit, visits the hospital where pretty Lucille Hutton works as a nurse. "A Homemade Man"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LLOYD "HAM" HAMILTON, a veteran comic who has clowned his way through many a laughable fun creation, tickles the ribs in this Educational two-reeler. The buffoonish "Ham" gives an impression of huge, dumb and stupid immobility. As a soda clerk he is sappy and articulately comical to such an extent that the gentle quakings he starts soon develop into genuine outbursts of hilarity. To be brief: "Ham" has a fine comedy. The hard-boiled exhibitor will concur with this statement when he hears the laughs it will pull from his clients.

"Ham" is a "mother's boy" whom Kewpie Morgan hires to fill a vacancy behind his soda fountain, at which the tired business men who frequent his gymnasium refresh themselves. Lloyd does a lot of silly things and his attempts to impress Lucille Hutton with the fact that he is a demon soda-jerker are all well done. After some hilarious moments behind the counter, "Ham" tries his hand at the gym paraphernalia. Here are some more occasions for gurgling laughs. Of course, they slapstick all over the scene and carry on a la roughhouse, but it is all good fun and if the latter half of the comedy is not as good as that which precedes, that cannot be laid at the door of Hamilton, whose oafish fun-making persists to the very end. A grand roughhouse finish tops it off.

"The Flight That Failed"
(Pathe—One Reel)

CARTOONIST PAUL TERRY'S use of the "good-will-flight" idea in this release, forms the background for a series of animated situations that will bring many laughs.

Farmer Al and Henry Cat depart on an air trip into the dark regions of Africa. Al Spies a lion, and upon descending endeavors to "glad hand" the beast, but instead is treated to a handsome cuffing. Saved by the Cat, old Al again tries his luck, this time with a tribe of man-eating cannibals. Al is given a royal reception, and is led to the speakers platform, where he urges a warmer relationship. He gets it, when the cannibals spring a trap door, dropping him into a pot of boiling water. Henry Cat once more comes to Al's rescue, and they turn the plane for home, but not before a family of skunks have made their way up the dangling rope ladder. In a desperate effort to escape their latest torture, the aviators finally wreck the ship.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

"Puppy Love"
(Pathe—One Reel)

ALTHOUGH there is no new twist to this Terry release, the animation is the cartoonist's usual clever brand, which rarely if ever fails to click.

Farmer Alfalfa's mischievous pups cause him no end of trouble, loosening the scaffold on which he is painting, tossing him into the well. The pups next turn their attention to Danny Dog and Adele Airdale, who are spooning in the park. The many tricks pulled by Danny to outwit the pups, supply most of the laughs of this number.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

"Thoughts While Fishing"—"Silver Shadows"
(Educational—One Reel)

EVEN in projection rooms where films meet their acid test these Bruce subjects of the beautiful outdoors charm the spectator. They contain so much of the beautiful, so much of nature's handiwork that they work right into your feelings. Imagine watching a delicious scene of a clear, swiftly running stream beneath whose surface you can catch glimpses of fish, of such numbers to be a magnet to any fisherman. Not only do these scenic awaken fruitful thoughts of nature, but they also produce a calm restful effect which can be ever so more strongly brought out in a sympathetic orchestral accompaniment. This Bruce subject will help an exhibitor's program immensely if scored with the proper music. A distinctive nature number.

Manipulating adjectives, one does not find them warm enough to describe adequately the unique camera effects of "Silver Shadows." You can liken them to rare paintings done in oil. All the artist in Bruce is apparent in these lovely shots, softly etched, expertly filtered, a record of beautiful shadows in the sky at dusk. Steeped in beauty, this little "Silver Shadows" is worth many a glance.—RAYMOND GANLY.

News Reel Resume

Last week Paramount News brought to Broadway the first pictures of Wilkins, conqueror of the North Pole, at Spitzenbergen. This was a beat over the other reels and, inasmuch as this same reel obtained the first picture of the Bremen crew on Greenely Island when competition was rife among all news organizations, the idea that the newsreel which Emanuel Cohen heads is a live one receives additional testimony.

On the whole, this week was uneventful. But there is more competition in the offing and the different newsreels will do their darndest to secure the new pictures of the Southern Cross and its courageous crew, whose flight across the Pacific is a thing to acclaim.

Cincinnati

THE numerous rumors which have been current in Cincinnati for the past several weeks as to the future of the Walnut theatre have been definitely set at rest. The building, acquired by the Keith-Albee-Harris-Libson-Heidingsfeld interests during recent months, has been disposed of to local parties, who will convert the structure into a large public garage. Constantly declining business is the reason assigned for disposing of the property.

Following closely upon the announcement by the Keith-Albee and allied interests that the Palace theatre, Cincinnati, playing vaudeville and pictures, would hereafter play a lesser number of acts and give three instead of four performances, except Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, the local offices of the same organization has given out information that a retrenchment policy would likewise be inaugurated at the Lyric, Capitol and Strand theatres. Six musicians will be dispensed with at each of the first two houses, and three from the Strand. No reduction in admission prices is mentioned in the announcement.

Andrew G. Hettesheimer, managing director of the Strand, Family and Keith's theatres, Cincinnati, was elected to the board of directors of the Stage and Screen Scribes of America, at the annual meeting held at Chester Park, Cincinnati, recently.

G. J. Reister, manager of the Ohio theatre, has dispensed with his corps of male ushers, and replaced them with the female of the species whose outer apparel consists of attractive blue smocks.

Although it is understood that the Loew interests are looking for a house in Cincinnati to be in close proximity to the recently-opened Albee theatre, located on Fountain Square, it is certain that they will not secure the Grand Opera House, as unofficially stated in many recent reports. A. L. Erlanger, who holds the lease on the house, has signed contracts for an extensive remodeling program to cost around $200,000, and will rename the theatre Erlanger's Grand Opera House when it opens in September, probably with a road-show picture in advance of the regular legitimate season.

Hamilton, Ohio, managers not only see red, but say they will probably have to purchase an extra supply of red ink for the summer months. Reason is that a several weeks' season of running races has been attracting the public, and now a 100-day season of dog races has been inaugurated, which not only diverts the crowds from the picture houses, but depletes the exchequer of the public to the extent that comparatively few coins are jingling in the theatre box offices.

The Eagle theatre, Hamilton, of which Lou Snitzer is manager, is playing vaudeville on Sunday in addition to the regular picture program.

Mrs. Frances Whitcomb, former secretary of Harry Hunter of the Paramount, Washington, D. C., exchange, has become a mother.

A moving picture to be entitled "The City Beautiful" is being made in Baltimore, which shows the development of that city from the early days to the present. It is being made under the auspices of the Woman's Civic League. During the summer, when the Municipal and Park bands give their concerts, it will be shown.

Due to lack of patronage, the Garden Roof dance pavillion over the New Garden theatre here will be opened only on Wednesday and Saturday nights throughout the summer instead of every night as had been planned.

Optics, Electricity, Practical Ideas & Advice

Emergency Lighting Units

THE need for a separate source of electrical energy apart from the main service brought into the theatre has long been recognized as necessary to take care of emergencies created by breaks in the regular service.

In some states, it is even mandatory that all exit lights be supplied with dual service, the emergency source of supply taking the form of storage batteries placed within the theatre or a direct connection being made to the street mains ahead of the house meter.

These legislative precautions, however, in those states which have them, are restricted solely to exit lighting, the idea being to provide for a sufficient amount of illumination to permit ready egress from the theatre in times of distress.

Aside from these minimum requirements, theatre owners were quick to realize that it also would be good business to extend this idea to include the major part of the electrical equipment in the theatre in order to assure operation at all times and especially during the brief intervals of momentary interruptions caused by minor accidents to the public service.

It is not at all uncommon now for theatres to install two separate motor-generator outfits, the individual units being so wired as to permit single action interchangeably or double action in parallel. This safety measure, which is directed entirely toward continuous operation of the theatre while the show is in progress is quite logical and necessary although it by no means takes care of interruptions in the main electrical service. Such an interruption, when it occurs, affects the entire theatre and all equipment contained within it so that some other agency is required to relieve this emergency.

This is best accomplished by means of a self-contained and separate emergency lighting outfit. Until recently the types most commonly used, employed a bank of heavy duty storage batteries, the combined capacity of which was sufficient to supply current simultaneously to one motion picture projector, a spot lamp, the house lights and even back stage lights.

Specially constructed sets even go so far as to provide service to the entire theatre regardless of equipment thrown on the line, the time limit of operation being in the neighborhood of one hour or more.

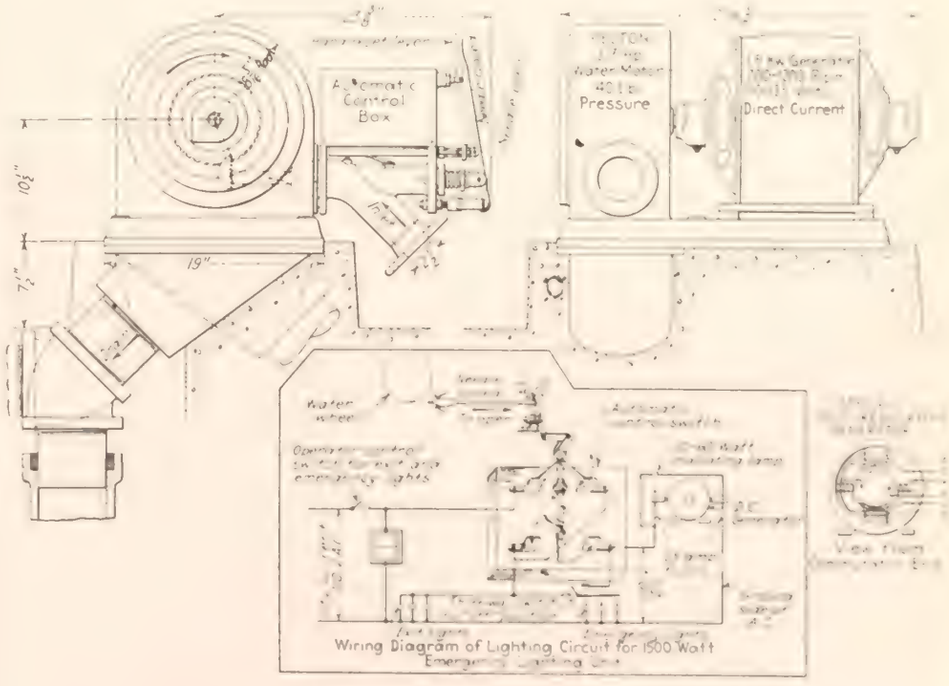
The battery sets are so designed and arranged that when a break in the main service occurs, an electrically actuated switch automatically and instantly changes the service over to the emergency set so that no break in the service to the equipment being used at the moment can be noticed.

A new form of emergency lighting set which incorporates old principles in a rather novel manner has been introduced to the theatre field and holds forth promises because of its extreme compactness and simplicity.

A distinguishing feature is its ability to supply current to the theatre for an indefinite period of time so that no matter how long the main service may be out of action there is no danger of the emergency system being unable to provide current continuously.

This outfit consists of a 110 volt direct current generator directly connected to a Pelton Water Wheel with the necessary automatic equipment to control the starting and stopping of the set when a service failure occurs.

When in operation, the Pelton Wheel (A Water Turbine) is driven at a high rate of speed by the impact of water issuing from a nozzle placed tangent to the edge of the wheel. Water is taken direct from the city mains so that a reliable prime mover is available at all times.



The automatic starting device, on the control panel, consists primarily of a solenoid which is connected to the house side of the switch that controls the exit or emergency lighting circuit. The solenoid is energized only as long as these lights are supplied with current from the outside or regular source of supply. When this current is cut off, the solenoid is de-energized and immediately and automatically causes the needle nozzle to open, which starts the water wheel and brings the generator up to full load and voltage within three seconds.

Simultaneously with the opening of the needle nozzle, a switch, which is part of the equipment, closes and turns the current, generated by the Hydro-electric emergency unit, into the theatre circuit. The unit continues to furnish current until the regular service is restored, whereupon it is necessary to close the needle nozzle manually, by closing a lever. The unit is, then, again ready to function automatically when the next interruption in the regular source of current supply occurs.

Figure 1 shows the general layout of the equipment and its manner of installation. These units are available in two standard sizes, 300 Watts and 1500 Watts. They are so designed, however, as to permit a heavy overload for several hours. Special units may be had in any size up to and including 5000 Watts.

With the present standard capacities, these sets are limited strictly to providing emergency lighting of a general nature in addition to the required exit lighting. Even the maximum capacity of 5000 Watts is hardly sufficient to take care of ordinary forms of projection equipment and the operation of a high intensity arc equipped projector would be out of the question.

For strictly emergency lighting purposes, however, there appears to be no reason why this type of set would not offer numerous advantages.

General Assembly of 1500 Watt Emergency Lighting Unit.

GOLD SEAL
Ticket Registers and "Tickets That Fit"

The Master Lock is an exclusive feature found only on Gold Seal Registers. With the many other points of Gold Seal superiority, it makes the Gold Seal the one best ticket register. No other register has bronze bushings on all the drivings shafts . . . rust-proof steel . . . . a cast aluminum ticket wheel . . . lubrication that is sealed in before the register leaves the factory. Only the Gold Seal operates any number of units with one powerful driving mechanism. That is why the shrewdest buyers specify Gold Seal in preference to old style registers.

St. Louis Theatres Prepare For Hot Weather

Amusement life in St. Louis, Mo., within a comparatively few years has undergone a complete seasonal change.

In the days when the old Century and Olympic were the city's leading dramatic theatres, the Columbia the leading vaudeville house; the Standard the home of folly two frolics daily and the Haviland and Imperial the places where real thrillers could be viewed for a dime and upwards the theatrical and musical life of the town went on vacation late in May.

Now, thanks to the use of electrical refrigeration and other improvements in cooling, amusement palaces get a fresh start with the coming of dog days while outdoor forms of entertainment not thought of twenty years ago are now the vogue.

On June 4 the annual season of light operas at the Municipal Theatre in Forest Park got under way while dozens of air-domes will be in full glory before the close of June. The Garden Theatre in St. Louis County has also added much to the Summer amusement life of St. Louis and vicinity.

Such houses as the Ambassador, Loew's State, the St. Louis, Missouri, Grand Central and Grand Opera House, being equipped with the very last word in cooling system, never close their doors because of hot weather and in fact when Sol is going strongest attract patrons because of the cool atmosphere that prevails in the auditorium.

Perhaps no city in the world has solved the hot weather amusement problem so effectively as St. Louis.

Remodeled Lyric Theatre Opened at Waycross, Ga.

After having been closed for several weeks for remodelling and complete renovation, the New Lyric Theatre, Waycross, Ga., has been reopened. To all appearances the house is brand new and is now one of the handsomest theatres of its size in South Georgia. The effect inside is of a Mediterranean castle.

The foyer has been completely changed and made more distinct in arch construction, being decorated with artistically arranged draperies. Beautiful iron grills have been placed in the arch construction, while the lighting effects have been installed to carry out the idea of soft shade and harmony. The decorations were by L. D'Englere, of Jacksonville, Fla., who is noted for his artistic work. In the New Lyric work he was assisted by T. J. Darling, Waycross contractor.

True Orchestral Tone

– Reliable and Quick Response

These are two of the many features so noticeable in Kilgen Organs; qualities which ever inspire the artist, and delight the audience.

Responsible for the full symphonic orchestral effects which so distinguish the Kilgen Organ there are, in the Kilgen Factory, "Voicers" of international reputation; master-craftsmen whose genius is the envy of their kind.

These are men whom the Great Organ Masters of the world are proud to know and greet as fellow-artists —as true musicians; for men like these can "make" an Organ.

All the wealth of tone-harmony and varied musical effect which their skill provides in the Kilgen is available at will with the speed of light; for, keyed to the touch of an electrical contact, its voiced response is instantaneous.

Supremacy

Among the organs, the "Supremacy" of the Robert Morton is evidenced in its selection and endorsement by a majority of the nation's foremost Exhibitors, Showmen, Organists, Performers and distinguished individuals in theatrical and public life.

Robert Morton UNIT ORGAN

Individual characteristic tonal beauty, greater range in variety of orchestral effects and exclusive patented features make it distinctly different from all other theatre organs.

Yet, for all its unquestioned superiority, the Robert Morton Unit Organ is among the least expensive theatre organs to own, not only because it is more durable, lasts longer and costs less for upkeep, but because it is an investment that pays for itself in increased box office receipts.

OFFICE OF ADOLPH ZUKOR
PRESIDENT

May 28th,

Western Electric Company,
195 Broadway,
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

For the past two years we have been investigating the performance of every device for the reproduction of talking pictures. After intensive study of every reproduction machine we have decided that the 'sound-projector system' of the Western Electric Company is the best.

Another factor considered in this decision is the ability of the Western Electric Company to produce in quantity, for it was realized that there would be an immediate call for a great quantity of these sound projectors from Publix Theatres, which owns, controls or directs the activities of a great number of theatres throughout this country and abroad.

Very truly yours,

Adolph Zukor

"after intensive study of every reproduction machine"

Mr. Adolph Zukor makes decisions not only from the viewpoint of a producer but also from the viewpoint of an exhibitor with nationwide interests at stake. What he has to say about Sound Pictures is therefore doubly important.

Highlights of the Week

Sound Movies, the First National Pool and Other Topics

By William A. Johnston

LOTS of things to talk about this week; important things, too.

As one of the real leaders of the industry remarked to me the other day: "I have never until now been so thoroughly convinced that the industry is so young."

"You mean, it is in its infancy."

"Well," he said, "I didn't want to use that bromide."

First there is the SOUND MOVIE—because it is first and foremost.

If you had dropped in this week on any one of the top executives in New York, it is almost certain that you would find them talking excitedly about the Sound Movie. Many, many plans are being made, and there is much to be done. The production job is a difficult one, and so is the distribution job. With respect to the latter, the question right now is how to fit synchronized pictures into the uniform picture contract. Then there is the question of prices and the matter of theatre installations.

With production, there is a brand-new technique to develop. I can easily recall that when features first appeared on the horizon the producers were unable to make them, and there was a great hullabaloo after competent directors who could. It will be the same way with the production of Sound Movies or "talkies".

One producing company had an important announcement to make to the exhibitors this week through the trade press, but held it back in the belief that exhibitors right now were not well enough informed on Sound Movies. I am very much inclined to doubt this. In our Sound Movie department this week, there is an interesting report from the field, gathered by a man who has interviewed one theatre after another and who will continue to do so. This would indicate that exhibitors are right up on their toes in the matter, and greedy for information. The smaller theatre is particularly interested. The house which has been running cheap vaudeville that has fallen flat with the public is eagerly looking to this new attraction. The house which has seen its clientele drifting away to the larger theatre expects now now to hold its neighborhood public with the Sound Movie.

The immediate question, of course, is how expensive an installation can the smaller house afford, and the second big question—and this applies to all classes of theatres—is what attractions are going to be available after the installation is made.

There are other interesting announcements this week: Warner Brothers starts announcing their Vitaphone product which has been in the making for the past two years or more. Sound Movies are also for the first time offered for regular review. Edwin Schallert writes from the Coast on an interesting development in sound movie presentation in the theatre. We print the first of a series of articles on the history of Vitaphone.

The best explanation I have heard of why the public is hungry for the Sound Movie comes from a picture executive who in turn got it from one of the geniuses of the motor industry.

"Your product", said the latter, "is after all quite similar to our own, so I have been

Editorial By Willliam A. Johnston

following the development of the movie with keen interest. You have proceeded with the evolution of a silent picture, and like ourselves, you have introduced every available element that would please the public eye and you have done wonderful things at great cost and with much commendable initiative. But after all, you have appealed only to the eye. You have left the ear hungry for something to come forth from the screen. The radio came along and appeased the ear hunger of the public and then this interest began to dwindle because while the radio ear was pretty well satisfied, the radio eye saw nothing. So now we are offered television.

"The obvious thing, therefore, for the silent drama to do is to please the ear as well as the eye. You have a tremendous job before you but you are going to somehow fill it because the public demand is as insistent as it is natural."

The sound movie is figuring right this moment in the big political moves of the industry. It is the new cement for merger building. There is the Stanley-Keith-Albee-Orpheum coalition of interests. Dig under the surface of this a bit, or rather get in behind the doors of the closed meetings being held and you will probably hear a lot about this and that sound process and installation.

And there's J. D. Williams. There's one thing about J. D. He can scent a new show angle faster than any man in the business. It's a pretty far scent across the ocean; but the moment he got here he jumped right back to England. And it was the sound movie that took him there.

Columbia announces this week that it will have synchronized pictures. And P. A. Powers comes forward with his Cinephone.

* * * *

FIRST NATIONAL—Most everyone seems pleased that First National has been reorganized and strengthened from within by a pooling of the franchise holders' interests.

There has been scarcely a First National franchise holder, whatever his other picture affiliations may be, who has not maintained right along a strong sentimental interest in the perpetuation of the company.

So much for that; the other, and the business reason, is that a number of franchise holders want to be protected with First National service. They are wise enough to know, and so it would appear should everyone else know, that a big theatre today cannot successfully run by giving two-thirds of its playing time to one picture service. We will except the Roxy, but that is different from several important angles; one is the theatre itself, one is New York City, and last but by no means least, "Roxy" himself.

PRESENTATIONS AND SHORT SUBJECTS.—It is quite apparent that presentations are passing out very definitely, and it is equally definite that short subjects are coming into their own. They should be recognized anyway for their own value on the program, but now it is apparent that they lend themselves immediately and naturally to sound production. We shall see a great year in short subjects.

CHAIN THEATRES.—Chain theatres seem to have broken down as a principle; or perhaps it is truer to the mark to say that they have broken down as a practise. Chain like the Saenger in the south and Comerford in the north have succeeded and are succeeding and will continue to succeed, because they were not organized for stock promotion purposes or to sell out. Secondly, and still more importantly, they have been built up carefully over the years as local institutions both as to management, contacts and banking support; in other words, they are more local institutions than units of a chain.

Chain stores have proven very successful but are utterly unlike chain theatres. They deal in an inanimate product which is sold almost entirely on a basis of bargaining. You don't sell bargains in picture theatres, but you do sell service to the public, and in that respect you do have a large and definite responsibility to the public.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

COLOR and sound are the latest trend in pictures, says Jesse L. Lasky, in line with Paramount's slogan, "Keep ahead of these changing times."

Changing times, they surely are. In this connection we note an interview with "Roxy" in a recent issue of The Magazine of Business. He points out that everything today is speed.

"While I am only an entertainer, I believe I should follow the same formula if I were a merchant or a manufacturer," he says. "I should speed up my business with style, color, change, light, brevity, contrast. These are the things that stimulate people's minds—and speed is largely a matter of mental stimulus."

An interesting thought from a great showman, and an analysis of what must be done nowadays in any business that wishes to keep pace with the age.

Mr. Lasky points out that the first of the new developments will carry out the idea that this is the age of color. It marks, he says, the coming of the use of photographic color in a greater number of pictures.

On this point, the Roxy interview is also in agreement. "I understand that some manufacturers have already discovered that color is speed. The motor-car makers discovered it a year or two ago. I noticed some typewriters finished in colors in a Broadway store window the other day, and I understand many prosaic articles are now being 'speeded up' with color."

* * * *

SPECIFICALLY, Mr. Lasky announces that Technicolor will be used in several sequences of "The Water Hole," Zane Grey story and probably for other stories by the same author.

As for sound, it, too, is a part of the changing times. We note with interest B. P. Schulberg's statement that Paramount has arranged with a number of celebrated authors and stage stars for a series of two reelers. The short subject is coming into its own, assuredly. It belongs most emphatically not only in an age of speed, but in the proper rounding out of the theatre program.

Sound will do wonders for the short subject, and the short subject will provide perhaps the greatest of all media for sound.

* * * *

PERHAPS never in the picture history of New York City have so many foreign pictures been on the screens at one time. In fact, we understand that more are being shown here at the moment than were ever on view simultaneously in London or Paris. The list:

Hammerstein's Theatre: "The End of St. Petersburg" (Russian); Greenwich Village, "Hands of Orlac" (German); Fifth Ave. Playhouse, "The Case of Johnathan Drew" (English); 55th Street Playhouse, "Husbands by Proxy" (Swedish); Times Square Theatre, "Dawn" (English); Cameo, "Shooting Stars" (English); Plaza, "Battles of Coronel and Falkland Islands" (English); St. George, Brooklyn, "Tartuffe, the Hypocrite" (German).

Also should be mentioned the German-First National film, "The Strange Case of Capt. Ramper," which played the Roxy last week. This is not an all-foreign film, but the others are.

ON the much discussed question as to how the present picture players are going to fit into the talking regime, a variety of opinions is expressed. Welford Beaton, in The Film Spectator, comes to the defense of the Hollywood folk. He writes, in part:

* * * *

"I WOULD gather from what I read and hear that producers are going to commit colossal folly of making a raid on the stage to secure artists to appear in oral pictures. They are going to look for voices.

"For the past dozen years producers have trained several thousand artists in the technic of screen acting; they know what these artists can do, and the artists are familiar with everything pertaining to the production of pictures. Among the thousands of screen actors and actresses in Hollywood are enough good voices to make all the oral pictures that will be turned out for the next ten years, during which time other voices can be trained. But the industry is showing a tendency to overlook the material at hand and put itself to enormous expense and trouble to secure material elsewhere. As a matter of fact, this voice business is overdone in Hollywood. It is not as important as we imagine. How many people on the stage have really good voices? Only a few. The only voice that has no place on the stage and will have none in pictures is the decidedly disagreeable one.

"The other day I conducted a little experiment of my own. During the luncheon hour at the Masquers' Club I spoke to as many screen actors as I could find. I heard perhaps fifty of them speak and I did not hear one voice that was unpleasant, nor one that would not be able to give a good account of itself. In Movietone or Vitaphone. The whole thing about this device proposition is the manner in which the voice is used to get the best result from the microphone. That is some thing that has to be learned by the stage actor just as it has to be learned by the screen actor who never spoke a line out loud in his life. Combing the Eastern theatres for people to make sound pictures is an idiotic performance, for the people thus secured must be taught, when they reach Hollywood, how to speak before the microphone and how to act before the camera; while we have here already thousands of people who have to be taught only how to talk, as they are trained in screen acting."

J. D. WILLIAMS returned to England late last week on the Olympic, and on the same boat were E. W. Hammons, President of Educational, and John Maxwell, managing director of British International, whose product J. D. will release in America.

Though without official confirmation, it is believed that the deal by which physical distribution of the Williams pictures will be handled here by Educational is virtually assured.

It is known also that J. D., with his usual keen insight into the major possibilities and developments of the picture business, will use sound with the product he is to handle, and it would not be surprising if an important announcement along this line comes from him before long.

He is expected to return to America early in July. Mr. Hammons will be away for six weeks, and will visit the Continent also.

J. Amedee Van Beuren, president of Van Beuren Enterprises, producing the new series of comedies featuring "Smitty," the cartoon character

Archie Mayo, Warner Bros. director, undergoes a little beauty treatment from Conrad Nagel and Myrna Loy whom he is directing in "State Street Sadie"

Tod Browning, whose flair for shadowy mystery films make Lon Chaney's vehicles noted for their atmosphere. "While the City Sleeps" is the latest

Frances Lee, who came from vaudeville to be Bobby Vernon's leading lady in Christie comedies and who is now to be starred in the "Confessions of a Chorus Girl" series, which will be made at the Christie studio for Paramount

Reed Howes, athletic star, demonstrates his stroke. He will not play tennis in his series of starring pictures for Educational, rather he will do aviation and other thrilling stunts to rouse the spirit of the fans

Corinne Griffith, beauteous First National star, as she appears in the first half of the special production, "The Divine Lady"

Anita Page, M-G-M player, visits the University of Southern California for a screen test of her voice. These tests, which are said to thoroughly analyze the qualities of all types of voices, are a part of experiments started by President Rufus B. Von Kleinsmid to aid motion picture stars to improve and adapt their voices for sound films

Patrick Campbell, newly appointed special foreign sales representative for United Artists. From 1918 to 1925, "Pat" was sales representative for D. W. Griffith

Kennedy Joins First National; Stock Pool Blocks Fox

Stanley and Leading Franchise Holders in Deal to Keep Company Intact; Irving D. Rossheim Becomes President

THROUGH the formation of a stock pool, participated in by the Stanley Company and leading franchise holders, the future of First National is assured, and the attempts of Fox to get control of the company have been definitely blocked.

At the same time, Irving D. Rossheim, head of Stanley, has been elected President of First National, succeeding C. B. Hawley, resigned. Joseph P. Kennedy becomes special advisor to the company.

The blocking of Fox and the working out of the First National situation in general is said to be highly pleasing to Adolph Zukor and the Paramount forces.

At first glance, it might appear that a merger of the companies with which Mr. Kennedy is now associated, officially or unofficially, is in the making. But, it is learned, a specialization plan is under consideration which would preclude a merger. Under this plan, First National would devote its attention to Class A features; F B O, to features for subsequent runs and smaller theatres; while Pathe would distribute short subjects exclusively, and would be in a position to handle the distribution of "shorts" for companies now distributing this type of product themselves.

In some quarters, it is reported that the Kennedy group of associated companies will be added to in the near future. Mr. Kennedy is now President of F B O; business advisor to First National and Pathe, with Colvin Brown executive vice-president, as his personal representative in charge of the operation of Pathe; and chairman of the board of directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum.

The First National situation was worked out at secret meetings which began in Chicago two weeks ago and were continued in New York. The Stanley Company, through Irving D. Rossheim, president, desiring to maintain the identity of First National, offered to leading franchise holders equal representation on the new board of directors. Other originators of the plan were A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, and Spyros Skouras, St. Louis.

Stanley holds 22,500 shares of First National stock, while Fox holds 22,500. In the pool now formed, which checkmated the Fox attempts to secure control of First National, the stock holdings of Finkelstein & Ruben, Skouras Bros., A. H. Blank, Harry Nolan and Balaban & Katz are joined with those of Stanley. It is also hoped to include the holdings of Robert Lieber and E. V. Richards, Jr., both of whom are in Europe.

Will Preserve Trade Mark

Under the new arrangement, the identity of First National will be preserved, regardless of whether the franchise holders in the pool sell their theatre holdings at some time or not.

The sympathetic attitude of Paramount toward the pool is evident enough, it is pointed out, because of the fact that several of the franchise holders are allied directly or indirectly with Famous.

As in the case of other big moves on the film chessboard, it was the position and business needs of theatre circuits which brought about the pool. If the control of First National had passed to Fox, the former company would have been eliminated as a producing factor and the amount of Class A product would have been reduced from a hundred pictures which the two concerns are now making to fifty or sixty.

Furthermore, the franchise holders felt that they need a variety of product and were firmly disposed to preserve First National to this end.

The Fox attitude, in general, seems to be to operate his big houses with his own product. This meant, in St. Louis, for instance, that Skouras would not be able to get the Fox product, when the big theatre which Fox is building there is completed. While Skouras is able to get Paramount, he does not get M-G-M due to the fact that the latter goes first run naturally to the Loew house, the State.

Likewise, Fox is building against Kunsky in Detroit, and will have a house in the Loop in Chicago which will be in opposition to Balaban & Katz. It has also been reported several times recently that he will build in Minneapolis, which would furnish opposition to Finkelstein & Ruben.

Franchise Holders Determined

Because of these theatre situations, the franchise holders determined to keep First National in business, in such a manner that it would not be possible for Fox to get control of the company.

The most prominent situation of all centered around the Stanley Company, control of which has been sought by Fox and Publix for some time. Fox, in announcing important houses to be built in the Philadelphia territory, caused uneasiness to the Stanley interests, and it was President Rossheim, of the latter concern, who became the prime figure in the pool to preserve First National.

"The Racket"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of the Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, June 9.—One of the best stage plays of the season just closing comes to the screen in "The Racket." Thomas Meighan is its star, and he hasn't had as good a picture in many a long day. Lewis Milestone directed for the Caddo Company, which with young Howard Hughes at the helm, looks like one of the coming producing organizations in the field. Paramount is releasing.

For once Meighan is provided with a bang-up cast throughout. Louis Wolheim, famed for his "Two Arabian Knights" rookie, plays the king of the bootlegging gang, Scarsi. Marie Prevost is the little cabaret singer, who turns to the cause of right out of motives of revenge. Richard "Skeets" Gallagher does the lackadaisical reporter, with a bottle in one overcoat pocket, and a copy of the American Mercury in the other. Lee Moran is the other reporter, Sam De Grasse the slippery State's Attorney, and Dan Wolheim is responsible for an excellent bit as the detective sergeant who finishes off Scarsi. They also secured G. Pat Collins from the stage version to play the officer who is shot by Scarsi, and he gives a capital performance. John Darrow is the cub reporter, and George E. Stone, Scarsi's brother. They are all very well cast.

Will Appeal to Meighan Fans

Meighan, of course, plays the police captain who sets out to break Scarsi's ruthless rule of law-breaking and slaughter. It is a fine old-fashioned straight role, such as Meighan's fans will find admirably to their liking, and Tommy looks exceedingly well in uniform.

The part of Scarsi is a little bigger from the acting standpoint, and will doubtless increase Louis Wolheim's prominence. It is a sly vindictive sort of character, and those who don't know the plot will wonder how he will be finally disposed of.

Aside from some preliminary sequences, the picture sticks pretty close to the stage play. Wherever an opportunity is offered some gags are injected. There is one scene where Scarsi attends the funeral of a man whom he has shot that is ironically funny. All the pallbearers and honorary pallbearers representing various lawbreaking factions are seated with black derbies on their laps. A dissolve shot shows beneath each of these derbies a hand holding an automatic. When the reporters come there to get Scarsi to tell what he is going to do to the police captain, they speak in tones loud enough to be heard by Scarsi who is near them, questioning his courage. This gets Scarsi's goat in a way that is distinctly humorous.

"The Racket" is a much better-than-usual underworld picture. For one thing it has more reality. It is conceivable that in the film version it will appeal to a very large audience, although perhaps the smart audience will enjoy it the most.

Sunday Closing Fight in Marion, O., at Standstill

The Marion, Ohio, Sunday theatre fight now appears to be at a permanent standstill, Probate Judge L. B. McNeal having ruled that he had no jurisdiction to hear charges against the theatre owners and employees of three houses who were arrested recently charged with violation of the Sunday law. The managers, E. F. Sharpless, of the Grand theatre; J. J. Huebner, of the Oakland, and Ora Deweese, of the Princess, after having been arrested on warrants filed by Rev. Marvin Crabtree, a Marion minister, continued to keep their houses open. It is now a question whether further charges will be pressed.

Schenck Announces Company's Largest Schedule—Says Sound Will Be Used on Films Adaptable to Device

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION this week announced that a total of 18 feature productions will be released internationally during the 1928-29 season. Of the scheduled 18 five already are completed, five more have been in production for several weeks and four will be placed in production in less than a month. This constitutes the largest number of releases made in one year by the United Artists company.

The announcement of the forthcoming season's releases by this company, made last Wednesday by Joseph M. Schenck, president and chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists, states that at least three of the pictures will be Movietoned with sound effects, scores and voices.

Sound Pictures

Among the pictures to be made with interpolated sound effects are "The Awakening," a Samuel Goldwyn production starring Vilma Banky. An Irving Berlin song will be the theme. Mr. Berlin also has composed the theme song for "The Love Song," a play laid in the time of Napoleon III in which William Boyd and Lupe Velez will be co-starred.

Charlie Chaplin is considering the use of sound in connection with his next picture and there is a possibility that he may introduce a Movietone sequence in which a song will be the feature.

"United Artists will use the sound device on those pictures to which sound is adaptable," Mr. Schenck's statement declares. "The addition of sound to pictures is a great step in the progress of films provided it is used judiciously. Its chief use by us will be in achieving more emotional climaxes and intensified dramatic effects."

The only new producer on United Artists' 1928-29 list is Rex Ingram. All the others made films for the company last year.

Line Up of Stars

The stars who will appear in United Artist pictures during the coming season are Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Dolores Del Rio, Vilma Banky, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore and Ronald Colman.

Mary Pickford will follow "My Best Girl" with a comedy-drama. Story and director will be announced by Miss Pickford when she returns to Hollywood.

Norma Talmadge has completed "The Woman Disputed," a film version of Dennison Clift's stage play. Henry King directed from C. Gardner Sullivan's scenario. Gilbert Roland is leading man and others in the cast are Olga Baclanova, Boris de Fas, and Gustaf Von Seyffertitz.

Gloria Swanson's successor to "Sadie Thompson" will be "The Swamp," an original story to be directed by Eric Von Stroheim, author of the tale. The locale is German East Africa. Production begins in June.

Dolores Del Rio will be starred in "Revenge," now almost completed. Edwin Carewe is making this version of Konrad Bercovici's short story, "The Bear-Tamer's Daughter." Leroy Mason, a virtual unknown, is leading man.

Vilma Banky becomes a star in her own right when Samuel Goldwyn presents her in "The Awakening," an original story by Francis Marion. Victor Fleming is directing from Carey Wilson's adaptation. Louis Wolheim and Walter Byron are in the cast. Hugo Reisenfeld will score the picture in Movietone. The film is now in production.

Charlie Chaplin in "City Lights" is seen on the boulevard, in cafes and night clubs, among high livers and "low lifes" as himself. The new Chaplin picture enters production within two weeks. Merna Kennedy and Harry Crocker are in the cast. It is an original story, written, acted and directed by Mr. Chaplin.

Douglas Fairbanks will be seen in an as yet untitled sequel to his film of Dumas' "The Three Musketeers." No director or leading lady as yet selected.

David Wark Griffith has completed for 1928 release "The Battle of the Sexes," a modern drama, based on the motive that "the sex battle is forever being fought but never won." Jean Hersholt, Phyllis Haver, Belle Bennett, Don Alvarado and Sally O'Neil head the cast. Geritt Lloyd adapted Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman's story.

Barrymore's Plans

John Barrymore's "Tempest," in which Camilla Horn and Louis Wolheim also appeared under direction of Sam Taylor, will be distributed internationally in 1928. Barrymore also will appear in an as yet untitled Ernst Lubitsch production to be based on an original story. Camilla Horn again will play opposite Barrymore. "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," announced as Mr. Barrymore's next picture, will not be filmed for 1928 release.

Ronald Colman becomes an individual star in "The Rescue," based on Joseph Conrad's sea story. Herbert Brenon will direct. Lily Damita, French actress, will be his leading lady. "Two Lovers," the

Big Hollywood Studios Are Now Actively Engaged in Preparing, Shooting or Editing New Feature Pictures

A GENERAL stir of activity is noticeable throughout Hollywood's studios at the present time. Most of the larger plants have launched work on heavy production schedules. Writers are putting into shape new stellar vehicles, directors are already on the lots engaged in shooting and cutters and editors are working on films recently finished.

The Paramount plant now has 10 pictures in the cutting room, six in filming and 2 due to start within a few days. In France, the company plans to produce "The Model of Montmarte"; it is now being cast and production will be begun shortly.

Clara Bow's "The Fleet's In" and Emil Jannings' "The Sins of the Fathers" are to be started immediately. Among those now in the hands of the cutters are "The Patriot," "The Wedding March," "Warming Up," "The Woman From Moscow," "Half a Bride," "The Sawdust Paradise" and "The Magnificent Flirt."

Fox Films' studio now is exceptionally busy, having seven features in production and four in the cutting rooms. Heading the latter group is "Four Devils."

Shooting has just been completed on "The Air Circus," "Plastered in Paris" and "The Cowboy Kid," the last named Rex Bell's second starring picture. In production now are: "The Farmer's Daughter," "Mother Knows Best," the first Movietone feature to be started by Fox Films, "The River Pirate," "Me, Gangster," "Prep and Pep," "None But the Brave" and "Making the Grade."

"White Shadows in the South Seas"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of the Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, June 9.—A tropical picture really filmed in the tropics, "White Shadows in the South Seas," shines forth as a preeminent novelty. There is no question about the backgrounds. They are decidedly unlike those made familiar in most Hollywood productions, while the story is romantic and contains good elements of suspense. It is based on a book by Frederick O'Brien, adapted by Roy Doyle and Jack Cunningham, and directed by W. S. Van Dyke for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Only one player in the cast, Monte Blue, is well known to the movie audience, but this is no detriment. There is so much pictorial interest and so much atmosphere in the film that this alone would almost suffice to draw attenton to it. Some people may object to an unhappy ending, but if they think it over they will realize it is the only ending that could be logical in this case. Furthermore, the pathos of the finish is unusually appealing, and dramatically the climax of the picture is, as it should be, the most powerful part of the plot.

Aside from Monte Blue, and the native Tehitians who took part in the production, the principal cast members are a new girl Racquel Torres, whom M-G-M has now signed under contract, and Robert Anderson, who plays the heavy. Both give adequate performances, and Miss Torres fits the type of the native South Sea Island girl exceedingly well. Her acting does not always click but is commendable in spots.

There are some fine shots in this picture. Those showing natives diving for pearl oysters are gripping. Good underwater scenes have tense interest. In one episode the foot of a diving native is clasped by a deep-sea clam, and another native has to go to his rescue, and pry him loose from the vice-like grip of the huge mollusc. In another the pressure of the deep water is so great that the diver's blood veins burst and his lungs collapse. It is thrilling stuff.

Native dances, the aboriginal customs of the islands, the preparation for a huge banquet feast are other items of unique attractiveness in "White Shadows." The preparing of the feast is shown in detail, and one of the amusing bits is that which discloses the island inhabitants scrambling up tall almost vertical trees to get cocoanuts for this festival.

The story of "White Shadows" deals with the greed of the traders in the islands of the Pacific. Cheap wrist watches are exchanged for priceless pearls, and ancient traditions and happiness are destroyed by the covetous invader. Against this, a beachcomber, played by Monte Blue, rebels. His kindness to the natives and defiant attitude toward the traders enrages their chief, and he has Blue placed aboard a plague ship, and strapped to the wheel of the vessel, which is set adrift. After encountering various perils, including a typhoon, which wrecks the ship Blue finds himself on another primitive island, where the romantic interest, his love for a native girl, develops.

The romantic part of "White Shadows" is very fictional, but possesses charm. This, combined with the exceptional scenic qualities of the production, should insure it decided attention.

Forces Opposed to Daylight Saving Combine in Muncie

The managers of seven motion picture theatres in Muncie, Ind., several labor unions and merchants have joined the long list of organizations opposed to the adoption of daylight saving time here. The list is headed by farmers of the county, who several weeks ago, through their official organization, voiced strenuous objections to the change in time. The theatre managers who are openly opposed to the project are Harvey Arlington, of the Rivoli and Strand theatres; George Challis, of the Wysor Grand; T. J. Lacey, of the Vaudelle and Columbia; Arthur Bennett, of the Liberty and Royal; John J. Meehan, of the Orpheum.

Not far from the city, at Decatur, Ind., it has been decided not to adopt the new time schedule. A petition signed by hundreds of voters was presented to the city council asking that daylight saving be put into effect, but the city council, following several weeks of investigation, found a minority in favor and unanimously rejected the proposition.

C. E. Burden in Post With Banking Concern

Charles E. Burden, who has many friends in the picture business, last Saturday resigned his position as manager of the real estate department of the Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., to assume an association with Ralph B. Leonard and Company, of 25 Broad Street, New York, who deal in bank stocks and investment trusts.

Mr. Burden spent five years with Universal Pictures Corporation, first as E. H. Goldstein's assistant and later as personal representative for Carl Laemmle. Previous to his entry into the motion picture industry, he was connected with the Irving National Bank, now known as the American Exchange Irving Trust Co., for a period of five years as a special representative of the banking house. His business activities before that were with A. A. Housman and Co., stock brokerage firm.

4,000 Petitioners Ask Blue Laws Be Set Aside

The fight for legalized Sunday amusements in York, Pa., was reopened on June 1, when a petition signed by 4,000 persons was presented to the city council, requesting that the provisions of the Sunday Blue Laws, passed by the State of Pennsylvania in 1794 and still on statute books, be set aside through the adoption of a local ordinance.

York at present has a local ordinance, passed two years ago, after a prolonged controversy, which specifically prohibits Sunday picture shows and other amusements. Former Mayor E. S. Hugentugler at first refused to enforce this law and his defeat for re-election is attributed largely to that stand. York, until the passage of the ordinance now in effect, was one of the very few cities in Pennsylvania where Sunday amusements were permitted. Sunday baseball is still played there, due to the fact that the ball park is located outside the city limits.

Herbert Jennings has been transferred from Detroit to the management of the Akron Keith's.

News and Comment on All Phases of "Sound" Pictures

Keen Exhibitor Interest in Talking Films

Feel Sound Pictures Will Revive Interest in Own Communities

By Staff Correspondent

THE small town and the medium sized town exhibitor is just as much hopped up over these "talking" pictures as is the leading first run exhibitor in the big city. The small towner is going to have a sound reproduction device wherever his seating capacity and bank account will permit it. This is the observation of one who for the past three weeks has been making a tour of the smaller towns with the idea of getting the reaction of the exhibitors toward sound pictures.

There is a general feeling among most exhibitors visited that the "talking" movie is here to stay, and will eventually be installed in the majority of the theatres in the small towns. Only the question of costs will prevent some from making installations, and even those who lack funds and have houses large enough to warrant making the installation are determined eventually to raise the necessary money somehow.

It is an actual fact that the advent of the sound picture has created more comment and enthusiasm among exhibitors than anything that has happened in the picture industry for a long time. Already there are various devices being used, but mostly Vitaphone and Movietone. Here and there one finds an exhibitor has experimented with an Orchestra-Phone or a Han-A-Phone.

As an instance of the desire to be up with the times, and showing the interest there is in the "talking" movie, one exhibitor in a Pennsylvania town endeavored to put over "The Jazz Singer" with a phonograph in the orchestra pit and a colored man behind the screen singing Jolson's songs, as the proper scenes were reflected upon the screen. Needless to say the procedure was a flop.

The small towner and the medium towner see in the sound pictures a chance and their only chance to keep their patrons from all going to the larger towns for their entertainment. They see in the new device an opportunity for the smaller house to regain some of its old-time popularity.

There are many towns through Pennsylvania that have recently installed Vitaphone because they found this was their only means of stimulating and holding their business. Several of these had beeen combination vaudeville and picture houses, but they found that vaudeville was beginning to fall flat in their theatres.

The Victoria, one of the Chamberlain theatres in Mt. Carmel, Pa., has installed Vitaphone to supplant vaudeville, and since the change has been doing a very good business in spite of the somewhat depressed conditions in the town due to the slack time in the coal mining fields.

The Strand Theatre, at Altoona, Pa., one of the Silverman Bros. houses, feels that Vitaphone has actually been a life-saver. The Earle, in Allentown, opened in January of this year with Vitaphone and has been doing the best business of any theatre in the town.

The Pergola Theatre, in Allentown, has Movietone equipment and vaudeville, and has been enjoying fairly good business. The only complaint of the management is that not enough Movietone subjects are yet available. The patrons of the house like the "talkies" and they like plenty of them. This is a problem that no doubt will be rectified in the immediate future.

Another Allentown house has heard a demonstration of the Photophone, and was so much impressed that the management will install this instrument as soon as possible. This same condition exists at a Williamsport house, whose owner has already received specifications and prices from the Radio Corporation of America, which will shortly market this equipment.

Charles Schreck, owner of the Temple Theatre, at Ashland, Pa., has just started construction of a new theatre there to seat 1,200, and his plans call for wiring for installation of one of the sound reproducing machines, but he has not signed the contract yet. He wants to hear demonstrations of all machines before determining upon installation.

These are just a few of the instances of cases where sound reproducing equipment has already been added or decided upon and the smaller exhibitors are at present feeling their way to find just what it will cost them, and how they can compete with the ones who have already installed one or the other system. All of them are interested and will take the step that will give their communities sound pictures, but they are wary in some instances of making the move until they have more general information than they have at present.

Talkie Highlights

SMALL town exhibitors see renewed interest in local houses and chance to compete with adjacent larger towns by installing sound reproducing equipment. Prominent Los Angeles neighborhood house shows talkies likely to do away with prologues.

New tieup is predicted along Broadway that will bring the stage and screen closer together than ever before.

Labor is becoming more agitated over "canned" music and indications are that a lively battle will be waged before this problem is disposed of.

Attorney General of Ohio gives Ohio Board authority to censor talking picture in a decision just handed down.

Equipment for the production of sound pictures is to be installed both at the M-G-M studios and the Fox studios without delay.

Paramount has ordered its first story especially written for the screen.

H. B. Warner Signed for Vitaphone Special

H. B. Warner, famed as a stage star and screen artist will be seen in a Vitaphone production during the 1928-29 season. He was signed by Warner Bros. during the week for one of the Vitaphone road shows the company will make.

Before becoming a star of the screen, Warner attained fame as one of the foremost actors on the American stage. Jack Warner, production chief for Warner Bros., feels that H. B. Warner's voice on the screen will add materially to his effectiveness as a picture star.

Talkies Score in Test With Prologues

Fashionable Long-run Houses Report Favorable Reception

By EDWIN SCHALLERT

Editor of the Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, June 9.—Sound pictures have scored a triumph over theatre prologues. This preliminary estimate of the effect of this new and important innovation is the direct result of the showing of the production of "Street Angel" at the Carthay Circle Theatre in Los Angeles. This is a house in the fashionable Wilshire district. It has established a policy of long-run attractions at advanced prices, and the results of the first use of Movietone, which device the theatre is using exclusively, augur most auspiciously for this innovation.

"Street Angel" had a run of over eight weeks at the Carthay Circle, and during the first four did a business that surpassed the record of any picture previously shown at the house. Not basically as strong an attraction as others which have been exhibited at the theatre, its reception is regarded more than favorably. The reaction of the public during the run was particularly noteworthy in the case of the news reel, which was changed weekly, and other incidental program features, notably a humorous lecture by Robert Benchley. The succeeding picture "Prince Fazil" is also being exhibited now with a supplementary Movietone bill.

Fred Miller Praises

Fred A. Miller, who operates the house, speaks warmly but judiciously of the results of the showing—"The reaction of the patrons to the innovation was all in all most favorable," he said, "and in a theatre of this type, which has specialized in prologue entertainment, and elaborate shows this is very significant. Naturally, we received some complaints about the change of policy, but they were in the minority, and with some slight changes we feel that we can venture another presentation of this character.

"Of the complaints we received about the change of policy we found only about one-fourth were directed at the absence of the prologue. The public seemed to respond to the new type of attraction most satisfactorily. While novelty may have played some part in this, it was also evident that they genuinely enjoyed the innovation.

"The musical accompaniment by Movietone received some criticism, but that is due in great part, I believe, to a peculiar situation that obtains in this theatre—namely the popularity of Carli Elinor and his orchestra. We used the orchestra only in the overture for the "Street Angel" showing, but we did not find this entirely satisfactory because of the interest that Elinor's work holds for our public.

"In showing 'Prince Fazil' we are therefore using Movietone accompaniment with the orchestral. Effects in this picture are especially good, and a number of the best occur right at the start of the production. We consequently start the picture with the Movietone accompaniment, and then later introduce the orchestra.

"Synchronization of accompaniments is going to be an important thing in the future, and is going to require the greatest skill in both arrangements of music and in recording fully to compete with the high class theatre orchestra. Nevertheless, I believe that it is coming, and will prove highly effective.

"Personally, I am not committed to any definite policy at this house. I might find it advisable at some future time to use prologues again. I do not believe that any cut and dried policy can be adopted at present. The theatre owner today must adopt a flexible attitude toward these changing conditions, but I do feel that the results with sound devices at a house of the type of the Carthay Circle are exceptionally encouraging."

Intrigues Film Colony

The showing at this particular theatre has naturally been marked with interest in the film colony, because it is the most striking use recently in the West, of sound devices at a theatre where the reserved advanced price seat policy prevails. It is perhaps the more remarkable that this policy was as successful as it was, since "Street Angel" was not a picture of road-show specifications, though it did have the drawing power of the names of Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor who recently appeared at the same theatre in "Seventh Heaven." This, it is conceded, was in part responsible for the tremendous attendance during the first weeks, but results aside from this were not disappointing, and in the matter of substituting sound device for prologue surprisingly gratifying.

38 West Coast Houses Are Already Equipped for Talkies

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, president of West Coast Theatres has made the announcement that 38 of the houses of the circuit now have Electrical Research Products sound synchronization equipment and that 25 additional installations will be made in the immediate future.

Construction is being supervised by John F. Coneybear, for fifteen years an engineer for the Eastman Kodak Company. He is being assisted by Michael Leshing, who will have charge of the new laboratory.

Fulton Atlanta Manager for Vitaphone

With the announcement from Paul J. Swift, general sales manager for Vitaphone, of the appointment of W. B. Fulton, formerly representative in the Atlanta territory, as Atlanta branch manager for Vitaphone Corporation, active operation went under way this week in the company's office at 161 Walton Street.

Over $50,000 worth of Vitaphone records have already been received by the Atlanta branch and additional shipments are continually arriving. Up-to-date in every detail have the accessory department, record testing room, film inspecting room and vaults been planned and constructed under the able supervision of H. Goldberg, of the company's Chicago office.

"Jazz Singer" Going Big in Western Cities

The picture production "The Jazz Singer" is reported to have been breaking records at the Victory theatre in Salt Lake City for the past two weeks, in connection with the Vitaphone and Movietone. This same program is reported to be going tremendously well at the Orpheum Theatre of Ogden, Utah, this week.

Sound Pictures Score in Oklahoma City

Vitaphone's inaugural in Oklahoma City, and Movietone's premiere, Oklahoma City, cashed in heavily at the Capitol and Liberty theatres respectively last week and both houses had S R O on Sunday performances.

The Romantic History of Vitaphone

(Editor's Note.—This is the first installment of an article on Vitaphone in three parts that will appear in successive issues of Motion Picture News.)

How Warner Brothers Acquired New Device and Developed System

THE business of making and distributing motion pictures is still referred to as the "infant industry," though it has long since outgrown its swaddling clothes, and, in fact, has reached the age of paternity. It has had a busy, if somewhat hectic career, but it has overcome many obstacles and has managed to thrive until it is now qualified to produce an offspring that is a surprising specimen of a real "infant."

Motion pictures have made rapid progress since the first small studio was outfitted in Hollywood. In less than two decades they have been developed from a pretty crude form of entertainment to a state approaching perfection in production detail and photography. But their progress scarcely limped along over these years as compared with that of the infant that is the outgrowth of them.

A Husky Baby

The so-called "talking moving picture" is just about as well nourished and husky a baby as could be brought forth in any industry. In fact it has developed so amazingly in the less than three years since it was first brought forth with any degree of success that it threatens in the immediate future, if it has not already done so, to absorb the parent and completely dominate the industry.

This astounding development, most of which has been revealed only in the last two years, and much of it within the last few months, is largely the result of the most skilled handling. It required a lot of early careful nourishing to give the infant a proper start in life and to lay the foundation for a successful career. But when it struck its stride, how it did travel!

To Warner Bros. and Vitaphone must go the biggest share of the credit for the tremendous popularity today of the "talking movies." And the lion's share of that credit must go to the late Sam Warner, whose fore-sightedness was at least partly responsible for, if it did not really result in the development of Vitaphone.

It was a crude synchronization apparatus that was first displayed to Sam Warner out at the Warner Studios in Hollywood some three years ago by a salesman of the Western Electric Company, who explained the intricate mechanism of Western Electric's system of sound recording and reproduction as it might be applied to motion pictures.

Sam Warner knew his pictures, even if this mechanism did not mean a lot to him. He knew the idea was there, though it might be somewhat crude. He saw the tremendous possibilities in this new departure in pictures, despite the failure of other devices, and he wired his views to his brothers in New York. Harry M., Abe and Jack Warner had confidence in Sam's judgment. Hadn't he secured for them the screen rights to Ambassador Gerard's story, "My Four Years in Germany"? So they wired their approval, and after a brief bit of further investigation they signed contracts with the Bell Laboratories and the Western Electric Company by which they secured the rights to Vitaphone.

A Recognized Factor

From that day the Vitaphone equipment has been constantly improved until today it is generally recognized as the leading factor in the "talking movies," despite the fact many new systems have come into existence since the advent of Vitaphone. The first move of the Warners on concluding their contract was the development of studio technique that would permit the use of the system to the best advantage. One of the biggest executives of these "talking movie" projects has said that sound film would completely revolutionize the picture industry in its other branches because it would bring many of the geniuses of the age into the picture industry; their genius for technique would bring about new methods that would be bound to react to the benefit of the entire industry.

Warners sought out some of these geniuses right at the start and with these engineers worked out many of the early engineering problems and conducted experiments at the Vitaphone studios in Brooklyn that brought immediate improvements. This was late in 1925 and early in 1926. It was apparent to them then beyond the shadow of a doubt that they had the apparatus for the reproduction of sound pictures, and so the Vitaphone Corporation was formed on April 20, 1926. It was a big gamble, this pioneering of such a radical departure in the motion picture industry. Before the first showing of "Don Juan," the first synchronized picture displayed on Broadway, Warner Bros. were committed to an expenditure of $1,500,000, which was exclusive, of course, of the production costs of the picture or the tremendous advertising campaign which exploited the initial performance. That amount was expended by Warner for the actual rights to Vitaphone and the improvements made in the apparatus from the time they acquired it.

The motion picture industry and the theatre-going public looked with skepticism upon the advent of Vitaphone. "Just another talking picture," was the attitude generally before John Barrymore in "Don Juan," with the synchronized musical score and the accompanying Vitaphone operatic stars caused a complete flip-flop in motion picture circles by their astounding performances at the Warner Theatre in New York on the night of August 7, 1926.

Following that first performance, the New York Times in an editorial said: "No single word (Vitaphone) however compounded, is quite adequate to suggest the amazing triumph which man has at last achieved in making pictures talk naturally, sing enthrallingly and play all manner of instruments as skillfully as if the living beings were present instead of their shadows . . .

"The most obvious fact is that this invention in its various forms will enable the smaller communities to participate to a greater degree than even the radio permits in the cultural advantages that have been possible in the past only in places of large population. But the more stirring fact is that it will give immortality to the faces and voices of those whom the world wishes immortally to keep among the living."

M-G-M Plans Installation of Sound Equipment at Once

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER has completed plans for the immediate addition of sound producing facilities at the Culver City studios, following a series of conferences between studio officials and technicians. One of the largest stages on the lot will be dismantled at once to make room for a structure that will house the first units of the sound picture equipment.

A building 70 by 100 feet will be erected on a vibrationless piling, with auxiliary sound proof walls composed of acoustically treated materials, so that no outside noises can assert any effect. The capacity of this sound-proof building will be four complete stages. In addition there will be a sound-proof monitor room housing electrical control panels for recording instruments, and a special laboratory for voice analysis.

Installation of the new recording apparatus will be supervised by two officials of the Western Electric Company, J. S. Ward and Major Thomas Levinson, by Professor Verne O. Knudsen of the University of California, and an expert technician from the Oakland recording plant of the Victor Phonograph Company.

Doug Will Use Sound Effects in Next

DOUG FAIRBANKS is quoted in The Daily Film Renter is London as saying he will use sound in his next picture. Asked if he would employ anything new in his coming film, which is to follow "The Gaucho," airbanks is quoted as saying:

"Yes, I shall introduce the Movietone, not for the voice, but for the effects. I believe that effects of that kind all add to dramatic strength. Film titles are a sign of weakness."

Vitaphone Short Subject Reviews by Chester J. Smith

"THE NIGHT COURT"—This is a very snappy comedy playlet by Hugh Herbert, with William Demarest in the leading role. It renders a program of activities of a New York night club with the scene shifted to a night court following a raid. The evidence is presented to the judge in the presentation of the program. It gives several snappy dance numbers interspersed with dialogue that is woven into a clever little playlet.

A Variety Subject

"Cougat & Company"—A pretty little variety subject is offered in this number, which should be appealing to houses large or small. Cougat was Caruso's accompanist for many years. He renders several splendid violin numbers. His fellow musicians and the Spanish troupe render selections of their native songs and dances, the program being made up as follows: a. Celito Lindo; b. Morenita Mia; c. Elito Lindo; d. Gypsy Dance; e. "The Old Refrain." It is a remarkably well recorded number.

"The Beast"—This is a dramatic playlet given by Irene Rich and Company, which includes John Miljan and Barry Townly, the author of the play, in the chief supporting roles. It is a very melodramatic skit of the ten-twenty-thirty variety, but the voices ring true and are well adapted to sound reproduction. It holds the interest well throughout.

An Effective Story

"Realization"—This type of story is bound to be effective wherever shown. It is a comedy by Hugh Herbert in which the author and Anita Pam have the leading roles. Herbert has injected some good comedy dialogue. His is a German character. He became wealthy as a button manufacturer during the war largely through the aid of his wife. He becomes something of a sport and a rounder, dissatisfied with his spouse and determined upon a divorce. This takes him to the office of Miss Pam, clever attorney, who in the end convinces him, on his own testimony, that a divorce is the last thing in the world he really wants.

"Non-Support"—Here is another problem involving divorce that is very well done and which rings truly of present-day family difficulties. It is a starring vehicle for Burr McIntosh, veteran stage actor, who is seen and heard to splendid advantage. Paul Kruger, Bonnie Jean De Bard, Linda Ann Corlin and Harry Foy are in the supporting cast. Here McIntosh as the judge, at a secret hearing, calls the quarreling couple together, convinces the wife that she has been entirely unreasonable, brings about a complete reconciliation and all ends happily. This is the type of short "talking pictures" that is undoubtedly destined to become extremely popular in all classes of houses.

Clever Entertainer

Harry Delf—This clever vaudeville and legitimate stage entertainer and author is seen in an act which served to make him popular on the vaudeville stage. He has a clever line of patter, a song or two and an Egyptian dance burlesque that is very well done and good for a number of laughs. It is almost identical with the act he last presented in vaudeville.

Morrissey and Miller Night Club Revue—Will Morrissey and Miss Miller, supported by Harry Downing, Charlotte De Lovelace, Vina and Arthur, and Sammy Cantor, together with the night club chorus go through their entire repertoire of revels in lively fashion, with Morrissey keeping up a continuous monologue. The number is well staged and will give to theatregoers outside of New York something of the type of review that is offered in these resorts. It is lively entertainment at that.

Highly Melodramatic

"The Lash"—This is another dramatic playlet in which the dialogue goes on continuously. It is most melodramatic, with Hal Crane, the author of the skit, William Davidson and Richard Tucker the entire cast. The story, laid in the Tombs has to do with the murder of Ned's father. Ned is put through a third degree process and finally admits that he killed his father with the butt end of the lash because of his inhuman treatment to his mother and the kids. The police inspector, without further ado finds it justifiable homicide. It is typical of the once popular vaudeville sketch.

Stage Stars Due on Vitaphone

Bryan Foy, Vitaphone studio executive, announces many leading performers of the musical comedy, vaudeville and legitimate stage included in the latest Vitaphone releases. From musical comedy have come Charles Ruggles, star of "Queen High;" Daphne Pollard, Ziegfeld comedienne; Charles Irwin, of "A La Carte;" Bailey and Barnum, of "Lady Be Good;" Larry Ceballos, director of the dance in "The Music Box Revue;" the three Brox sisters, of "The Music Box Revue;" the Ingenues of the 1927 Ziegfeld "Follies;" Winnie Lightner of "Artists and Models;" Jack Denny, of the Shubert forces, and Jay C. Flippen, of musical comedy and vaudeville.

Vaudeville has given Harry Delf, Charles Rogers, Bert Swor, Klein brothers, Eddie Quillan, Eddie Peabody, Al Herman, the Foy Family, Val and Ernie Stanton, Fields and Johnston, and Meyers and Hanford.

Sarah Padden, noted character actress, has been signed to appear in a short subject, as has Karyl Norman, female impersonator. Robert Ober, leading light of the New York stage, will be seen and heard in a Vitaphone playlet, "A Regular Business Man." Ann Grey, popular radio artist and singer of "blue" songs, will appear in a short subject.

Grand opera will also be well represented in forthcoming Vitaphone numbers. Rosa Raisa, soprano of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, will appear in two productions, and Chief Capoulican, Indian baritone of the Philadelphia Opera and former member of the Metropolitan Opera, will be heard in a program.

Columbia Will Produce Sound Pictures

Harry Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, says that certain of the specials Columbia will produce for next season will have sound accompaniments, but up to the present time the company has not decided under what process it will operate. Company executives have been considering synchronized pictures for some time but are still studying the various devices to determine which is the best before signing up.

Broadway, Portland, Gets Movietone Equipment

Manager Floyd Maxwell announces that the engineering staff of Electrical Research Products corporation has completed the final installation of the new Fox movietone equipment at The Broadway theatre in Portland, Ore. New bookings will be announced shortly.

The Hollywood, large Portland West Coast suburban house, reports much better business since the addition of Movietone and Vitaphone.

Firnatone Accompaniment for "The Squall"

Present plans call for Firnatone accompaniment to "The Squall," First National's screen version of the Broadway stage hit. If they are carried out it will be First National's first picture in which the players speak their lines.

New Tie-Up of Screen and Stage Is Predicted on Broadway

A NEW tie-up between screen and stage is predicted on Broadway as a result of the sound picture racket.

This would have to do, mostly, with big musical comedy and revue productions, which could be filmed, with sound, with original New York casts, and would, observers say, prove a boon to the picture houses.

Those who discount the possibility of dialogue on the screen cutting seriously into the legitimate plays, see a bigger field in the musical comedy stuff which would supplant presentations and give the picture theatres a new business-puller.

Picture producers are said to have approached one of the biggest Broadway managers with offers to buy the rights to some of his past musical productions, but without success, as the producer is reported waiting for a bigger price, including probably a cut-in on the gross.

It is pointed out that a Broadway production of the type mentioned costs around $150,000 to produce, sometimes more. The sound film of the show could be made during its Broadway run, and release could begin in the bigger percentage of picture houses, the Broadway manager holding out only those towns—about thirty in number, in which the actual show itself would tour.

The legitimate managers are watching the sound picture development with great interest for possible effect on their own business. On the road, it is said, some touring companies have come to grief in competition with Vitaphone in the picture houses. This is additional evidence that the public wants sound pictures.

Labor Troubles Continue Over "Canned" Music

LABOR troubles continue to crop up as a result of additional installations of synchronized music apparatus in theatres all over the country. With the Federated Musicians determined to raise a protective fund of $10,000,000, it looks as though a lively battle may be anticipated. A number of the houses are prepared to take care of their musicians, but in others they have already been dropped or will be in the near future.

As the result of a controversy in Atlanta, union operators at the Metropolitan Theatre were called out last week. The Metropolitan declined to comply with a demand of the union that three musicians be employed to change disc records on the non-synchronizing sound reproducing instrument. The Metropolitan depends entirely upon sound reproducing devices for its music. Vitaphone is handled from the projection room by the regular motion picture machine operator. The non-synchronizing instrument is located elsewhere and is operated by two ushers chosen for the simple task of changing disc records. With the union operators called out the Metropolitan manned the booth with non-union operators.

Two free park band concerts a week for six weeks will be given by Local Union No. 2 of the Musicians Mutual Benefit Association in St. Louis, Mo., as a demonstration of its protest against "canned" music, Steve Butler, business agent for the musicians, announced at the regular meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Unions at Unity Hall on Sunday, June 10.

The meeting also adopted a resolution calling upon the Board of Aldermen to increase the appropriation for park concerts from $10,000 to $25,000. The city spent the latter amount twenty-five years ago.

During the debate on the resolution it was asserted that the annual appropriation was reduced from time to time as a result of the opposition of some motion picture theatre owners.

From Detroit comes word that all Kunsky houses, including their suburban theatres, except the Adams and Madison, downtown first-runs, are being wired for "talkies." The Kunsky office announces that the musicians will be taken care of, but the union is said to be preparing to take action if it becomes necessary.

Hagerstown House First With Vitaphone

The Maryland theatre of Hagerstown, Md., is the first playhouse in the state outside of Baltimore to be equipped with Vitaphone mechanism, which was installed recently by Isaac Slutzker, manager.

Sound Pictures Go Big in South

The south, like all other parts of the country is going more or less "talking picture" mad. Installations of sound reproducing equipment are being made rapidly by some of the chains and by independent houses.

The Modjeska Theatre in Augusta had a gala opening last Monday night of "The Jazz Singer" with Vitaphone accompaniment. Vitaphone also made its debut Monday night in Nashville at the Knickerbocker Theatre, the ace house in the powerful chain owned by the Crescent Amusement Company. The picture shown was "When a Man Loves," with John Barrymore and Dolores Costello. It is believed that the installation of Vitaphone at the Knickerbocker is a forerunner of a movement in that direction in other houses of the Crescent chain, which controls 142 theatres.

With Vitaphone previously established at the Strand Theatre in Birmingham, the Alabama Theatre inaugurated both Vitaphone and Movietone this week. The picture shown was "Tenderloin." The Alabama is one of the finest Publix houses in the Southeast.

It is understood that Vitaphone synchronized pictures will be used only occasionally for the present at the Alhambra and that the majority of the synchronized pictures will go to the Strand. The Alabama is the local home of the Publix unit shows, while the Strand is a straight picture house.

Vitaphone scored a triumph in Savannah where "Tenderloin" opened at the Odeon Theatre on June 5. The debut of synchronized pictures brought out capacity and overflow audiences and drew enthusiastic comments from press and public.

Lloyd Considers Sound for Next Comedy

Harold Lloyd is preparing to start work on a new comedy for Paramount release within the next two weeks. The final decision on the story has not yet been made. This is now being considered by the comedian, as is also the matter of sound in connection with the picture.

In the past Lloyd has declared against dialogue or sound accompaniment for comedies, but the tremendous popularity of those sound photoplays now being released has caused him to hesitate before going ahead with his new picture unaccompanied by some type of sound.

Seventy Vitaphones for New England Theatres by July 1

VITAPHONE expects to have seventy installations made in the New England territory by July 1. At the present time twenty-five houses are now using the equipment. The Publix Theatres are installing thirty Vitaphones in their houses in New England, and the New England Theatre Operating Company through its manager, Jake Lourie, has an option on ten for houses in Greater Boston.

Included in the list of theatres in the territory which are now being equipped for the operation of Vitaphone, in addition to the Publix and New England Operating Theatres are, Strand, Providence; Bates, Attleboro; Strand, Lowell; Empire, Lawrence; Marlboro, Marlboro; Strand, South Boston; Colonial, Brockton, and Colonial, Newport.

Distributors to File Answer June 20

An answer will be filed June 20 by the Hays organization, 10 distributors and the 32 Film Boards of Trade, to the complaint brought against them by the Department of Justice to test the legality of arbitration. Following this a date will be fixed for answer involving the rules and regulations of the Film Boards.

Both sides of the case are anxious for action and the defendants, represented by Cadwalader, Wickersham and Taft, will get together with the government attorneys in an attempt to expedite matters inasmuch as no date for trial has been decided upon pending filing of the answer.

Barrymore and Logan for New Gotham Film

Gotham Productions has signed Lionel Barrymore and Jacqueline Logan for the leading roles in "The River Woman," first of Gotham's four specials on the 1928-29 program.

The Barrymore-Logan combination will swing into work very shortly—as soon as the script, being prepared by Adele Buffington, is completed. "The River Woman" is a story of the Mississippi levees.

John M. Stahl Will Direct Special for T-S

John M. Stahl's first special production for Tiffany-Stahl will probably be "Loves of Sappho," and it will be his first directorial effort since joining the company. As vice-president of Tiffany-Stahl in charge of productions, he has been concentrating on studio activities, but now, it is thought, he will soon take up the megaphone again on "Sappho." It is estimated by Tiffany-Stahl that this special production will cost over one quarter of a million.

"Redskin," Dix' Next, in Technicolor

"Redskin," planned by Paramount as an epic of the North American Indian, will be Richard Dix' next vehicle and it will be produced entirely in Technicolor. Production is to begin immediately following the star's vacation trip to recuperate after his recent illness. Louise Brooks was recently assigned to play an Indian girl. Victor Schertzinger, who will direct, is at present on a location scouting trip in northern New Mexico.

Hal Roach Opens Eastern Office in New York

A permanent New York office, located in the Loew's State Building, was opened this week by Hal Roach. The inauguration of the office has been arranged by Benjamin W. Shipman, vice-president of the Roach organization, who is on a visit to New York in the interests of Mr. Roach.

Mrs. Helen Harris Jones has been made eastern representative and will be in charge of the New York branch.

Court Favors Exhibitor

Frowns on Deposit Demands in Continuing Injunction Against Pittsburgh Film Exchanges

THE decision of a Common Pleas Court Judge in Pittsburgh continuing a temporary injunction restraining distributors from enforcing demands for deposits and from withholding service from an exhibitor who refused to arbitrate a contract dispute, is attracting widespread interest in trade circles.

The decision was rendered by Common Pleas Judge Thomas D. Carnahan in favor of P. L. Gorris, an exhibitor of McKeesport, Pa., on motion to have continued until final hearing the temporary injunction against a group of distributors from whom he received deposit letters following his refusal to arbitrate a controversy with United Artists. Gorris charged conspiracy and was granted a temporary injunction by Judge Josiah Cohen restraining F B O, Fox, Pathe, Educational, Universal and Tiffany-Stahl from enforcing their deposit demands and withholding service. The decision was in connection with a preliminary action. Final hearing on the case will not be held until late summer or the fall.

In making his decision, Judge Carnahan gave an opinion which, in substance, declared it illegal for distributors who have no contracts with an exhibitor to send to that exhibitor deposit letters.

The opinion follows:

"I have no difficulty in determining the course I ought to pursue in this case as it is presented now. It is only presented in a preliminary way. What is done now is not done finally. It is not in the course of our equity rules to treat this as a final hearing, and there is no short-cut way to reach a final hearing by proceeding for two or three days in preliminary hearing. It is not a final hearing and I have not chosen to treat it as such, and would not do so. The only question with me is what I ought to do in the meanwhile.

"I intend to continue this injunction until final hearing. I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not criticizing the course of the defendant. There are some things that require very serious consideration, I think. There are some serious questions to be considered by the Court and which will be considered at the proper time when a full and final hearing is heard. There are some things in these contracts that do not seem to me to be right, and yet I am not deciding them. The contracts look to me to be very one sided contracts. The contracts are said to have been made by representatives of the exhibitors as well as the distributors, but the contracts themselves are all in the interest of the distributor and the exhibitor does not seem to have very much to say about them. He has nothing to do personally with the making of his own contract, not a word. He can say whether he will or will not; these contracts are submitted to him and the business is controlled by an organization and he is told 'You can sign this contract or refuse to sign it, just as you please.' Now that is exactly the situation, but if he does not sign it, he does not do any business, and if he does sign it, he will agree to what is in that contract, and almost every provision in that contract is in favor of the distributor, so far as I can understand.

"So far as the arbitration is concerned, there is a provision about arbitration, but what has the exhibitor to do with that? He does not have any choice in the selection of the arbitrators at all. The arbitration arrangement or agreement or clause is made by a representative of the exhibitors and distributors and they get together—the national organization provides for that, the national organizations of each—and they arrange these clauses in the contract. Every one of them is for the protection of the distributor, as far as I can see. There is a provision that three exhibitors may sit on the arbitration board and three distributors and the three distributors are taken right from the very people who compose that board—there are only 14 of them—and the other three are taken from a large organization, and the exhibitor has nothing to say about it at all; he cannot open his mouth about it and he has got to accept their decision or accept none.

Now, I am not saying that the defendants could not get along with any other kind of contract; I am not saying that that contract is illegal—that it is unenforcible; there are some things in it that seem to me very inequitable and if it should turn out they are, this State would not enforce them, but I am not deciding that question. I say that the situation here fully justifies me, and leaves me no course to pursue but to let it go to final hearing; because I cannot see how the defendants can be hurt by it, although the attorney for the defendants claims they can. I am not concerned about other people who are not concerned in this suit, but I cannot see that they are very badly hurt, if hurt at all, and these, on the other side, may be very seriously hurt.

"Now, under the circumstances, it seems to me that the situation ought to be kept in status quo until the final hearing."

"Way of Strong" Second from Columbia in June

"The Way of the Strong" is the second June release for the Columbia program, its date being June 19. Mitchell Lewis, Alice Day, Margaret Livingston, Theodore von Eltz and William Norton Bailey are the cast. Frank Capra directed.

Paramount Orders Story Especially For Sound Picture

FROM Hollywood comes word of new production activity. Luther Reed, who has just completed "Sawdust Paradise," the current Esther Ralston starring vehicle for Paramount, is reported writing what is said to be the first story written especially for talking pictures.

Mr. Reed is well known as the author of "Dear Me," a successful play produced by John Golden which had a year's run in New York and a subsequent run of several years on the road.

It is said that Reed's experience as a playwright will prove of value to Paramount who, by engaging John Cromwell to supervise talking productions, has already recognized the importance of men with legitimate experience.

Robert Milton, well known New York stage director, has been engaged by Paramount to supervise the direction of its talking pictures and has come to the Paramount Hollywood studios to study the technique of this field of production before starting on his actual duties.

Sound film activities continue at Warner Brothers Studios.

This week Al Jolson's "The Singing Fool" which is to be one of the Vitaphone specials of the season and the all Vitaphone opus, "The Terror," went into production. These productions are expected to contribute vitally to the progress of talking pictures and are in line with the announced policy of Warners to include dialogue in all their current season's product.

Ohio Board is Given Authority to Censor "Talking Pictures"

THE Ohio Board of Censors has been authorized to censor "talking movies," according to a ruling made by Attorney General Turner. The Board, according to the ruling, shall, if necessary, order eliminations of objectionable matter, either seen or heard as part of the picture.

This ruling was made in an opinion to John L. Clifton, Director of Education, and head of the Ohio Censor Board. The matter has been much in controversy and has been fought by the talking picture interests.

Seitz will direct another special, "Blockade," which he will launch immediately after "The Circus Kid' has been completed.

Claim Fox Expansion Has Increased Resources to $64,000,000

As a result of an expansion program carried on during the past three years, during which $30,000,000 was expended in development of the company's resources, Fox Films now claims resources valued at $64,000,000 as against $16,000,000 in 1925, according to executives of the company.

According to the executives, Fox Film now owns and controls through subsidiary and allied companies upwards of 230 theatres and has assurance of additional first run outlets for product in new theatres being constructed at Detroit, St. Louis, San Francisco, Brooklyn, Newark, Boston and Los Angeles.

Other developments resulting from the expansion activities include the new 100-acre modern studio at Fox Hills, Cal., and the establishment of popularity for several stars unknown three years ago.

The largest theatre development recently made was acquisition of the Wesco Corp., controlling 232 theatres. Official estimates of the income of the latter are as follows: Gross income $40,000,000 and net annual income of $2,000,000. The profits of Fox as a result of the Wesco Corp. will be received from three sources: net profit from theatre operations, share of the film rentals and share of the reciprocal business, that is rental of Fox films to other picture producing and exhibiting companies whose pictures are rented to Fox controlled companies, the statement of the executives of the company points out.

Brandt Talks On Europe

Columbia President Tells of Production Conditions Existing in Foreign Countries

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, just back from an extended trip abroad, has made an exhaustive survey of conditions in Europe, and has considerable to say regarding them. Each of the European countries, according to Mr. Brandt, is anxious to make motion pictures for exhibition in the United States, not only for the direct monetary return, but for the strong propaganda values, and to give emphasis to the relative importance of each country in relation to world affairs.

Joe Brandt

In discussing the situation, Mr. Brandt says, in part:

"The argument has been advanced that quantity pictures are made because of the restricted distribution area which European pictures have. In the main, this has been so, due to the short-sightedness of my own countrymen in not having a more sympathetic attitude towards the European producer by giving him access to the important outlet of the United States. Also the argument is advanced that had American theatres made in the past definite gestures of their willingness to acquire a certain number of European pictures, it would have given a financial impetus to the European producers, thereby enabling them to make a better grade of picture by reason of the additional income from the United States, and greater still have given them courage to pursue and develop the latent ability which we know exists in every country.

"America is a ready market for foreign made product of every description, and there is no reason why there should be any dissentient voice raised against motion pictures made abroad. Especially is this so since hundreds of thousands of American people travel to Europe every year, not only to study culture, customs, habits and see the scenic splendors, but also to learn first hand the contental conditions and the individual temperament of every nation. Therefore I am of the opinion that motion pictures properly produced and having the necessary technical quality will be readily accepted by the American public.

"For my part, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to receive an international delegation of producers at the Columbia Studios in Hollywood, with a view to arriving at a common purpose and to establish definite fundamentals."

K. C. Convention Film Delivered in Record Time by Flying Laboratory

PRESENT day development of airplanes played an important part in the transportation of film and newspaper photographs of the Kansas City Convention when a Ryan monoplane, with a fully equipped laboratory for the developing and printing of pictures, rushed Richfield-Paramount News-Associated Press prints to their Eastern distribution points. The plan was similar to Lindbergh's and was piloted by Bud Gurney.

All laboratory equipment necessary for developing, printing, cutting splicing and titling film as well as a dark room for handling stills, was installed. In addition to the pilot, the crew consisted of S. H. MacKean, assignment editor; David Sussman, laboratory manager, and Harry Cuthbertson, cameraman, all from the New York office of Paramount News.

It is believed that the laboratory 'plane will mark a new era in the rapid transportation and showing of news film. All the work, which takes hours of time at distribution points, was performed while in the air.

Jones Announces Plans

Work on First Production Already Under Way on West Coast; Four Adventure Films to Follow

DEFINITE plans are announced by the Buck Jones Corporation on forthcoming production in Hollywood studios. The cameras will begin work at once on "The Big Hop," starring Buck Jones, with Jobyna Ralston as feminine lead, and plans are under way for four other adventure films of large calibre. "The Big Hop" will be directed by James W. Horne, who was placed under contract this week.

The first interior scenes of "The Big Hop" have already been completed in studios leased in Universal City and production offices have been established there. When Jones returned to Hollywood, recently, Don McElwaine gave him the finished script and placed at his command an organized group of technicians ready for action.

Miss Ralston's following and her particularly suitable type as support for a movie plainsman was responsible for her being chosen as feminine lead. She has appeared as support in several Harold Lloyd comedies and was also featured in "Wings" and "Gigolo."

Horne has figured in several box office successes, and Jones is confident that he has secured the services of a first line director.

Edward Hearn will play the role of the pilot in "The Big Hop," which has an aviation climax, Hearn distinguished himself in the title role of "A Man Wthout a Country." Francis Ford and Charles French also have prominent parts. Ted Brook will act as assistant director.

Rich sets and fashionable costuming will be some of the features in "The Big Hop." Some of the sequences will be made in Technicolor.

War on School Showings

Northwest Exhibitor Organization Fires First Gun in Non-Theatrical Drive at Spring Grove, Minn.

THE opening gun in a campaign of the Northwest exhibitor association to end the competition with member theatre owners of such tax free showings as at school halls has been fired in Spring Grove, Minn., where E. Elingson, manager of the local theatre, is seeking an injunction to restrain the local school from exhibiting pictures in competition with his house.

W. A. Steffes, president of the exhibitor organization, declares that the case will be carried to the highest court if necessary and has expressed his confidence that competitive motion picture exhibitions by schools and churches will be ruled illegal. Further commenting upon the competition of so called "non theatrical exhibitions," Steffes said that the Federal Trade Commission's failure to adopt the resolution regarding non-theatricals can be interpreted only as an indication that that body would take the stand that film companies can refuse to sell product to organizations for non-theatrical exhibitions. He also pointed out that such business ethics have been upheld by the supreme court.

The Spring Grove school authorities gave the name of the Auditorium theatre to the auditorium where picture presentations are given when they received information that the exhibitor organization was preparing to take court action against the school exhibitions.

14 Comedies Coming from Educational in July

Six two-reel comedies are on Educational's line-up of pictures for July. In addition to the comedies, there will be eight one-reel subjects and ten new issues of Kinograms.

"Roaming Romeo," new Lupino Lane comedy, sees the funster as a galley slave in the days of Nero. "Listen, Children" presents Lloyd Hamilton as a drill master in a young boy's military school. Jerry Drew has a vehicle in "Ladies Preferred," which shows the comedian engaged in a flirtation campaign. "Hop Off," new Charley Bowers comedy, offers a pair of trained fleas in addition to Bowers himself.

The grudge fight of a gob and a marine forms the comedy theme in "Leaping Luck," a new Mermaid featuring George Davis and Monty Collins. "Blondes, Beware," a new Tuxedo comedy, features Johnny Arthur. Wallace Lupino, who is to appear on Educational's new program largely in two-reel comedies, is seen in two of the three Cameo comedies released in July, "The Lost Laugh" and "Hard Work." The other Cameo comedy, "Oh, Mama," features Jack Miller. A Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge subject is included on the program. This is untitled as yet. A "Felix the Cast in Astronomeeous" and "Felix the Cast in Jungle Bungles," are the two new animated cartoon comedies from the Pat Sullivan Studios. "Wild Wool" — "Night Clouds" are new Robert C. Bruce Outdoor Sketches.

Lesser Number of Shorts for Coming Season

News' Check-Up Reveals Producers' Programs Will Have a Slimmer Output Than Last Season

A CHECK-UP of the various comedy studios of Hollywood made by a Motion Picture News reporter, shows fewer two-reel subjects for the coming season as compared with past production schedules.

Last year, according to the News' check-up there were 222 two-reel comedies produced by the four major companies—Pathe, Educational, Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This year these companies will make 174 comedies or 48 less than the past season.

All of the short subject producers have curtailed production this year. Following is a complete schedule of the coming season's product:

Educational	52
Universal	48
Fox	26
F B O	48
M-G-M	40
Pathe	48
Paramount	34

This is a total of 296 comedies, while last year the exhibitors had over 300 to chose from. Pathe alone made 82 last year.

All of the comedy lots are active again. Sennett started last week with three companies at its new plant in North Hollywood. Educational has three units working and Hal Roach, Christie and Universal an equal number shooting.

"Fazil" Premiere

The Carthay Circle Theatre was the scene of another brilliant opening on Friday evening, June 8. It was the Western premiere of "Fazil," a Fox production with Movietone accompaniment. Other Movietone subjects on the program were the Fox news reel and a two-reel comedy, "The Family Picnic." This latter proved a tremendous success. It was directed by Harry Delf with Kathleen Key and Raymond McKee playing the principal roles. An excellent atmospheric prelude arranged by Carl Elinor, preceded the picture.

"Fazil" was somewhat disappointing, principally because of lack of story interest. It is a story of the desert and Venice, with the usual conflict between a man of the east and a woman of the world, who marries the desert man and refuses to abide by his mode of living.

The Movietone musical score for "Fazil" is one of the finest pieces of work that has yet been devised. It was arranged and adapted by S. L. Rothafel and Erno Rappe. "Neopolitan Nights" was the theme played for "Fazil" and was a happy choice.

Charles Farrell, who plays "Fazil," was more or less convincing as the desert Prince, although he was apparently ill at ease in the ball room scenes. Greta Nissen is "Fabienne," the French girl, who falls in love and marries the desert man. Her striking appearance and languorous love-making outshone that of Farrell. Other excellent roles were contributed by Mae Busch, John Boles and Tyler Brooke. Hank Mann and John T. Murray were splendid in two comedy bits. Howard Hawks directed "Fazil." L. W. O'Connell photographed it. Pictorially, it is beautiful.

McCall's Next Picture

George McCall, former newspaper man and assistant director on "The Last Moment," will direct an aeroplane feature for Hal Walsh Productions, a newly formed independent company. Hal Walsh is a prominent Los Angeles attorney.

"Embarrassing Moments"

Biro Returning to Europe

Lajos Biro, after a most successful 18 months in the Hollywood Studios, has returned to Europe. Mr. Biro achieved considerable prominence on the continent as a writer of stage plays, then when Paramount purchased his play "Hotel Imperial," for Pola Negri, he was invited to come to America and adapt it to the screen. Hollywood then discovered that the playwright had talent for film play writing, and he was assigned to do several more stories for Miss Negri, among which were "The Forbidden Paradise," and "Barbed Wire," on which he collaborated with Rowland Lee. For Emil Jannings, Mr. Biro wrote two great successes "The Way of All Flesh," and an original "The Last Command."

After five months at First National on a year's contract, Biro was granted a release for the purpose of returning to Hungary. However, before his departure, he turned out "The Yellow Lily," "His Wife's Affair," and "The Squall."

Signs with Paramount

Jean Arthur, signed recently by Paramount for the girl role in "Warming Up," was gratified last week when the company signed her up for a year as a featured player.

College Band Popular Drawing Card at Spartanburg Theatre

THE appearance of the Clemson College band on the stage in conjunction with the showing of Reginald Denny in "That's My Daddy" at the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., was more of an attraction than just an ordinary stage band.

The Clemson Alumni Association of Spartanburg insisted that the 35 boys who comprise the membership of the band stay at their homes rather than that of a hotel. The placing of the boys in the various homes was in itself a drawing power and kindled a certain amount of interest that wouldn't have otherwise been created.

It was through the Alumni Association that Manager Whitaker was able to get the college band at a nominal figure. However, it gave the boys a couple days away from their studies and the Alumni Association provided plenty of entertainment for them when they weren't busy playing at the theatre.

The seat of the college campus is about 60 miles from Spartanburg from where they and their instruments were transported by truck.

The newspapers were liberal with advance stories and reviews during the engagement; 200 one-sheets and 200 window cards advertising the band were placed all over the city and in many windows which have heretofore not permitted any advertising media other than their own products.

Despite the incessant rain that continued throughout the engagement, the S. R. O. sign was hung out on the opening night and to capacity.

"Find The Line Contest" Proves Good Business Getter

MANAGER MARSLINE K. MOORE tied up with one of the Fort Smith newspapers in a contest that resulted in over 150 inches of free display for "Sadie Thompson" playing at the Publix New Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.

Several managers have found the "Find-the-Line" contest an excellent medium of advertising a picture and Moore found it equally successful in Fort Smith.

Five lines taken from five different ads appearing on the Classified page are shown on the special ad. The idea of the contest is to find the ads these lines belong to and then copy the ads and the line or cut them out, indicating which line goes in each ad.

The ten nearest correct and neatest solutions received each day during the run of contest were awarded two tickets each to the New theatre—good on any of the first three days of the following week.

Accuracy counted foremost in the winning of a prize and neatness and originality in arranging the solution were a second factor in determining the winners.

Different lines were submitted each day and ten pairs of tickets were awarded daily.

Everybody was eligible to compete and from the avalanche of mail reaching the newspaper's office, it proved to be one of the most popular contests ever sponsored by the newspaper and theatre.

Installs Show Window In Lobby Ticket Booth

THE Whitehouse theatre, Milwaukee, under management of Otto Meister, is installing what will be an innovation in theatre front advertising.

A panel just above the ticket booth is being removed to make way for a show window.

This will be changed weekly. Strong spot lights will play on the panel at night, and an irregular shaped canopy above the ticket booth will draw attention to the display.

Los Angeles House to Try Films and Stage Plays

A policy new for Los Angeles houses, both screen and legitimate, will be tried out on June 16 with the re-opening of the Belmont, First and Vermont Avenue, under direction of J. P. Goring. Goring says he has tried his policy—feature pictures and a stage play simultaneously offered—in other theatres with success.

The Belmont's programs will consist of a first-run picture and a full-length presentation of New York plays. The first program will have "The Devil's Skipper," Tiffany-Stahl release, and "New Toys," a Broadway comedy with Opal Cotton, Winnie Wayne, Fred Cummings and others. It is expected that the stars of the picture will also be present for the occasion. Popular prices, the same every day of the week, will be the rule at the Belmont, it is said.

Oliver Completes Theatre at Alamogordo, N. M.

George B. Oliver, Jr., proprietor of the New theatre, corner 9th street and New York Avenue, Alamogordo, New Mexico, announces the completion of this theatre structure. The theatre proper covers a plot 25 x 120 while the building occupies 50 x 120.

Briefs

MANAGER CLIFF LINDSEY of the Palace theatre, Lubbock, Texas, took advantage of the fact that Lubbock is a college town by employing the "Student Prince" voting contest as an exploitation stunt for the picture "The Student Prince." With the aid of an M-G-M exploiteer, Lindsey obtained a tie-up with the Texas Tech. college paper to boost the stunt to elect by votes the most popular student of Texas Tech. A ballot-box was placed in the lobby of the theatre and each paid admission carried with it the right to one vote, to be cast by the patron for the favorite student of the college.

IN conjunction with the Sportcraft Knitting and Manufacturing Company of Seattle, Manager James Q. Clemmer of the Fifth Avenue Theatre recently treated his patrons to an elaborate style revue of every type of sport garment for the summer months. Twenty of Seattle's most charming misses were utilized as models, and paraded up and down a specially built runway around the orchestra pit in the newest finery.

MANAGER C. CLARE WOODS used the old bucket "racket" showing an assortment of buttons that were presumably 'busted off' from laughing to exploit "Fools for Luck" playing at the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo, Colo. Copy underneath the button assortment read, "These buttons were busted off men's vests from laughing so heartily at 'Fools for Luck' -Now Playing."

A MICROPHONE and amplifier have been used recently by Manager Harry Dahn of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, to relay waves of laughter from the theatre interior to the street outside when feature comedy or other pictures have been screened. The "mike" is installed on the orchestra floor. The amplified laughter has literally stopped the crowds on the street.

CLEVELAND was asked to write a new ending to "Drums of Love" last week's feature attraction at the Stillman theatre. In order to make the stunt of real interest, prizes of $50.00 and $25.00 were offered for the best endings submitted. It was good publicity and the picture was the general topic of conversation in all circles.

A CO-OPERATIVE arrangement has been made between Thomas Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook theatre, Baltimore, and the circulation department of the Sun, by which tickets costing ten cents may be given newsboys of the Sun who sell the greatest number of papers each week.

THE Palace theatre, Hamilton, recently staged a "Who's Who in Hamilton" contest, showing the backs of various local merchants on the screen, and offering suitable prizes for those in the audience who guessed the correct identity of the participants.

BELIEVING that it would be better to keep people in the suburban neighborhood of Toronto, known as the Beach District, Manager Harvey Williams, of the Beach Theatre, organized the Beach Men's Softball League.

Theatres' Participation Aids Music Week

A healthy rivalry among the various states with regard to the number of local Music Weeks within their borders was a feature of the fifth National Music Week on May 6-12, which was observed in nearly 2,000 communities. This matter was referred to in some of the Music Week proclamations which were issued by the governors of fifteen states.

In swelling their totals of Music Week participation, various states counted considerably upon the increased observance of Music Week by the motion picture theatres. That increase was largely brought about by the suggestions for special music features provided not only by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America—through the trade press—but in the printed matter distributed by the National Music Week Committee, 45 West 45th Street, New York City. It is desired by that Committee that any motion picture house which made even the slightest participation in Music Week on May 6-12, shall send a report on that participation to the Committee, for inclusion in its forthcoming book, "Five Years of National Music Week."

Bunker Director of Stage Productions at Eastman

Gayne Ralph Bunker has joined the Eastman Theatre staff as general director of stage presentations. He is in charge of all production activities at the famous Rochester institution which was George Eastman's gift to the community. Mr. Bunker, after a long stage experience that included appearances in many of Al H. Woods' most noted successes and an earlier career with the Washington Square Players, was made stage director of "Diplomacy" now running in New York with an all-star cast. He resigned that post to accept the Eastman offer. At the Rochester theatre he is producing two acts each week with a permanent stock company of fifty singers and dancers. His prologue to the Lon Chaney picture, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" recently presented was acclaimed by the Rochester reviewers as one of the most effective pieces of stage craft the theatre has offered.

Youngsters as Salesmen For Serial Play

LOU LANDAU, owner-manager of the Washington Theatre, Granite City, Ill., pulled a very successful, although not expensive city-wide exploitation to boost "King of the Jungles" serial, which opened at his theatre on Friday, May 11.

On the Friday prior to opening he gave a special matinee to which he invited all the children of Granite City. At this show he explained the serial in detail and then offered a season pass to the boy or girl who would bring back to the theatre within a week the names and addresses of the men and women to whom they had spoken about the picture. The rules required the children to speak to adults met on the street, ask them if they knew what the "King of the Jungles" was, tell them all about the serial, and get the name and address.

Drive to Make Patrons "Request" Showings of Older Releases

MANY first run houses have faced the problem of wanting to show certain pictures which have been exhibited elsewhere and hesitate to do so for fear of public reaction to their presenting any but strictly "first run" offerings. In many cases, also, the words "Revival" and "Reissue" are fatal. George Fleishman of the State theatre, Toledo, recently found himself in this situation with regard to "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which had already played another house in Toledo. In order to get around the problem, Fleishman devised a plan whereby he made the patrons themselves "Request" a showing of the picture.

Cards were issued to patrons attending the theatres and to those who went into the big stores. These cards featured the lines: "Do you want to see Lon Chaney in 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame'? Check yes or no and leave at the box office."

Simultaneously Fleishman started a newspaper campaign. Every day he carried an announcement that thus-and-so-many thousands have said they want to see Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Every day the numbers increased who wanted the picture. And finally Fleishman announced that the picture was being shown by Popular Request. The important thing about the stunt was that the public responded to it and really did send in marked cards.

Promotes Thrift Plan Tie-up with "Easy Come Easy Go"

MANAGER WARREN IRVIN used 3,000 new pennies to excellent advantage in advertising Richard Dix in "Easy Come Easy Go" at the Publix Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

A tie-up with one of the largest banks was responsible for the bank sharing equal expense of giving out envelopes that contained new pennies and copy about the picture. Copy on the envelopes read, "Easy Come Easy Go"—Richard Dix comes into possession of a large sum of money in his latest picture at the Carolina Theatre Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday. He wishes you to share his wealth so take this gift which will help start a Saving Account at the Independence Trust Co.—See EASY COME EASY GO and share in the fun too."

The bank gave out 1,000 of these envelopes to their customers when they made a deposit. And also placed a large one-sheet card in the most prominent location in the bank on a table where all entering could see it. Copy on the one-sheet read, "Richard Dix has left a present here for you—Be sure to get yours today."

A similar tie-up was made with one of the largest department stores who placed the 1,000 envelopes in wrapped packages. Another 1,000 envelopes were distributed through the principal office buildings.

War Veterans Guests a Showing of "West Point" at Regent

THROUGH an arrangement with the local National Guard, the members of that organization were the guests of Manager J. Coughlin of the Regent theatre in Elizabeth, N. J., at a special showing of "West Point." This party in honor of the soldiers was the means of giving added prestige to the theatre and as well proved a medium for popularizing the showing.

In full uniform 200 men of the 114th Infantry marched from the Elizabeth Armory to the Regent Theatre to see "West Point."

The National Guardsmen were commanded by Major John D. Leonard and the Junior Tabs Fife and Drum Corps played the march music under the direction of Major Richard Barry.

Many Veterans of Foreign Wars appeared in uniform as did members of the American Legion.

The management of the Regent issued the invitation to the soldiers with the end in view that an intimate picture of life in the national military academy would be of interest to them.

A Corking Small Town Idea

George A. Bartlett, manager of the Capitol theatre in Willimantic, Conn., outlined to me the other day when I happened into his town some of the high powered ideas he employed to put his theatre in the class of real money-makers. Bartlett has had a hard battle on his hands ever since he assumed charge of this beautiful playhouse and he has worked it up to a winner.

He told me about how the youngsters flocked to his house at the free matinee at which he announced details of a Pony stunt. The pony cost him just $65 and the enthusiasm it worked up in the town owing to the interest of the youngsters and their abilities to talk a thing up the results could not be bought for ten times that amount by direct purchase.

Amateurs Supply Comedy Relief

We, incidently, had the laugh of our life on this same visit, as it happened to be Amateur night and when we say Amateur, we mean Amateur, because every one of them were real honest-to-goodness locals, and their efforts to entertain had everyone in the theatre, and that goes for me, too, laughing until their sides ached. Considering the time of the year, the daylight saving evil, and the warm weather, they had a mighty fine crowd and we can readily see that Mr. Bartlett is making money on his idea.

It would, perhaps, be unfair to mention this Amateur Night without calling attention to genial George himself, who officiated as master of ceremonies, and his mimicing of the various locals had the house howling for all it was worth (and in passing we just want to say that George is no lightweight).

We could not leave Willimantic without mention of the Gem theatre—as pretty a little house as you would find anywhere, and ably directed by a man whose dignity and gentlemanly appearance are reflected in the operation of the house.

A Dividend on a Good Investment

Our readers will recall the reference to the Police Benefit ball in which we cooperated with the department and helped make it a success.

We were greatly surprised to be called to a meeting of the Benefit Association and presented with a beautiful onyx ring, and the front page story in the local paper is reproduced on this page. Needless to say, that the subject and the theatre were being talked about for a week after.

We suggest that you re-read the original story about the Police Ball in the issue of May 19th so that the connection between that article and this little story will be understood.

POLICE MAKE GIFT TO CAPITOL MANAGER

Charles E. Lewis Receives Ring from Benefit Association —Clear $1100 on Ball.

Manager Charles E. Lewis of the Capitol theater was presented with an onyx ring suitably engraved Sunday afternoon by members of the Middletown Police Benefit association at a meeting held in the patrolmen's room at headquarters. The presentation was made by Sergeant John S. Ward and Mr. Lewis responded.

In connection with the recent ball by the association the Capitol theater furnished several acts of vaudeville entertainers, and the gift to Mr. Lewis was in recognition of his courtesy. Final reports on the ball yesterday indicated that $1,100 was cleared.

Learning Things From Others

We wonder how many readers of our department took note of Harold B. Franklin's article in The Showman, published in The Motion Picture News of May 5. I have always been a great admirer of Mr. Franklin's methods, and in looking over his article find many valuable pointers that intelligent managers everywhere ought to take note of.

Let me quote one sentence, in which he says, "It is not necessary for a manager to be able to understand the details of projection, but the successful manager should be able to distinguish good from bad projection, and the progressive manager keeps abreast with the improvements that are brought forth in that field."

Which leads us up to the subject of projection. We were very much surprised to find in our travels that this very important item in theatre operation has been sadly neglected in many of the smaller towns. We happened upon a theatre in a town about twenty thousand population, and the theatre appeared to be quite modern and up-to-date, with the exception of the picture on the screen. And when we reached the booth, we found equipment so ancient, as booth equipment is judged today, that it would look far better reposing in a museum. The projectors were of a very old model, the lamps were the old type arc, and the generator was a big affair that belonged in the same museum with the rest of the equipment.

The Economy of Good Equipment

Without treading on the manager's toes (and he, by the way, was one of the owners of the theatre), we tried to show him what a mistake he was making, both from the standpoint of good projection and economy in operation.

At this time it is not our intention to take upon ourselves the recommendation of any particular type of equipment for the booth as we are selling nothing but ideas, but we do know that the new low-intensity reflector arcs and a small, up-to-date generator would have paid for itself in this theatre in just about a year, not taking into consideration the marvelous improvement in the projection.

While we have only noted one instance, we can honestly say that we found similar conditions in quite a few other towns and theatres.

Mr. Franklin's article brought out many sensible suggestions and plenty of corking advice that is worthy of the attention of all theatre managers, regardless of whether they are operating "shooting galleries" or magnificent movie palaces.

An Effective Campaign

When we prepared for the advertising campaign on "The Port of Missing Girls," we went over every possibility thoroughly. A week before the opening date, the newspaper carried on every page, except the theatre page, a box, 1 column by 3 inches, reading, "Missing—Ruth King, description, etc."

Three days before the opening we carried a box at the bottom of our regular ads reading, "What becomes of the 75,000 girls who are reported missing every year?

At the same time we dressed an alcove in our lobby which was the size of an ordinary room—but if that is lacking, any corner would do. Using old scenery we made it look like the outside of a living room. Looking through the French windows of the set you see a neatly furnished room, and seated, with her back to the window, is the figure of an old lady with a handkerchief to her eyes and holding a tabloid paper (sold by the exchange) with a screaming headline "Ruth King Missing." The newspaper was brought out by the use of a baby spot.

The effect of this lobby display was terrific as hundreds of people came into the lobby just to see it.

Distribution of Tabloid Papers

The day before the picture opened, five thousand tabloid sections of the Exchange Herald, suitably imprinted, were distributed in every paper sold in the town through co-operation of the newsdealers, and also placed in every letter box in most of the residential sections. Several hundred were mailed to names selected from the telephone book, and still others were placed upon counters in stores situated in the surrounding towns and villages.

On this same day the newspaper announcement was made with a three-column flash, and by this time the connection between the teasers "Ruth King Missing" and the picture was firmly established.

The lobby display was worked out by Edwin Laighton, the assistant manager, and to him goes the credit for creating and executing it. It was the talk of the town, and still is.

Make the Idea Suit the Film

While every picture does not carry the exploitation angles that "The Port of Missing Girls" offered, this campaign could, nevertheless, be worked out on quite a few other pictures just as long as it does not occur too often. We should all try to keep in mind that a good idea must not be worked to death.

"Sadie Thompson" should require little exploitation where the story and the play are well known, but we used the alcove off our lobby with a cut-out of the three-sheet showing Gloria and the marine under the umbrella and a rain effect in front which, under a baby spot, was eye-arresting the moment anyone passed through the lobby. This idea was employed primarily for the purpose of calling attention to the picture, rather than to sell it to the public.

"3 Passions" Appearing in Book and Magazine

"Three Passions," the Rex Ingram production being made in Europe for United Artists' release, is a film version of Cosmo Hamilton's new novel which will appear serially in Collier's Weekly and which will be published in book form in the United States by Putnam's. Ingram is personally writing the scenario. Alice Terry, Ivan Petrovitch, Shayle Gardner, Gerald Fielding, Clare Eames and Andrews Engleman are in the cast.

Exteriors will be filmed in England, with Magdalen College, Oxford, to be employed for several scenes.

Key City Reports

New York City

BROADWAY houses did not share in as good business the past week as they did the week before. There was not a great deal of difference in the strength of line-up and the drop in trade must therefore be attributed to a seasonal slump—Summer weather getting in its regular wallop along with daylight saving time—and there's no use crying about it.

Perhaps the most unusual piece of news for the week was the new lease on life taken by the Strand. Warner Brothers' talkie, "Tenderloin," was the needle which gave this house a better week than it has seen for quite a time—demonstrating that this industry is quite right about being "het up" over sound pictures. If talkies can snap the Strand out of what has appeared to be a bad slump for several months, then they certainly ought to be taken seriously.

There wasn't any depression at the Paramount where George Bancroft in "The Dragnet" (Par) and good entertainment by Paul Ash again gave this house Winter standard of business. Undoubtedly the Paramount is the best paying theatre along Broadway at the present time. The shows here are good and the Paramount audiences like them—and if they don't they can go down in the basement and marvel over the new Child's palace of a restaurant. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford are also back at their local Wurlitzers.

As mentioned last week, the Capitol held over Lon Chaney's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" (M-G-M), and while business was not up to the first week's mark, it did fairly well for a hold over in a house of the Capitol's size for this season of the year. The Roxy slipped again with "The Strange Case of Captain Ramper" (F. N.) and this time not even the good Rothafel bill was added attraction enough to bring in a satisfactory business for New York's largest motion picture theatre.

The Rivoli held over "Ramona" (U.A.) for an additional week. This picture has done a nice business here but the extra week may be forcing things a bit. "Street of Sin,," at the Rialto, had just a fair week. Maybe Jannings' followers are finding out that this one is not quite as hefty as some others. The little Cameo was another house to breeze lightly along. The offering was an importation titled "The Living Image" and it wasn't very much alive.

"Tempest" (U.A), still continues at a fast clip in the Embassy where it has been chalking up some nice box office records and there can be no kick about the way "Wings" (Par) is still going at the Criterion. The aviation picture is comfortably filling this house at all performances. As mentioned last week, "Abie's Irish Rose" is leaving the 44th Street theatre to undergo vocal treatment at Paramount's Long Island studios—and this is probably the wisest step which could be taken—all things considered. A voice will undoubtedly revive Abie's drooping spirit.

"Fazil" (Fox), a sizzling, hot film of the desert, appears to be good b. o. at the Gaiety, where it took the place of "Four Sons" and this film is probably in for a good run. Chas. Farrell is appearing in two Broadway pictures at the current writing—"Street Angel" (Fox), the other, is at the Globe, where it is getting a pretty fair play. At Hammerstein's "The End of St. Petersburg," depicting the end of Czar Nick's regime, is still meat for New York's Russian population—and others. The film is doing well.

The Astor, with "The Trail of '98" (M-G-M), is feeling effects of the season and is probably nearing the end of its very good run. The Central, with Universal's "The Man Who Laughs," is also dropping off a bit from its satisfactory pace. At the Times Square, Arch Selwyn's "Dawn" is proving a worthwhile attraction. Warners' closed its run of the Vitaphoned "Glorious Betsy" and this house will await the coming of "The Lion and the Mouse," another Vitaphoned picture which has been going well at points outside of New York.

Chicago

BUSINESS continues to disappoint the majority of Chicago theatre owners, better weather conditions enabling the crowds to go to the parks and beaches, which they seem to prefer at this time of the year, rather than the movies.

"His Tiger Lady" was the screen feature at the Chicago and "The Hula Blues," the stage attraction, business for the week just ended being fair.

"The Good-bye Kiss" ended its run at McVicker's to rather poor business, while the Roosevelt had a more encouraging week with "The Dragnet."

"Ramona" continued to pull well at United Artists theatre.

"The Hawk's Nest" on the screen and Mark Fisher and his gang in "Jazz Butterflys" did fairly well at the Oriental.

The Uptown theatre offered Lou Holtz in person as its leading stage attraction and "The Yellow Lily" as its feature, box office reports being about normal.

The Tivoli had a strong program, including Van and Schenck in person, and "Laugh Clown, Laugh." Business was good.

"The Skyscraper" was the feature at both the Granada and Marbo theatres, the stage attraction at the former being Charles Kaley in "June Bugs" and at the latter Benny Meroff's "Ha, Ha, Ha." Attendance at both houses was about normal.

Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS movie houses enjoyed average business last week. Weather conditions aided in boosting attendance.

The Circle had the best "well rounded" show and did fair business. Dick Powell, master of ceremonies of the Circle stage band, presented "Happy Days" with the picture "Lady Be Good," Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall starring.

Ed Resener directed the Circle concert orchestra and Miss Dess Byrd played the organ. A slight pick up in business has been noted due to local interest in Dick Powell, who replaced Eddie Pardo as master of ceremonies.

The stage presentation, "Hey! Hey!" by Charlie Davis's orchestra was popular but the picture "His Tiger Lady" with Adolphe Menjou and Evelyn Brent was not so well liked.

Gilda Gray in person with "The Devil Dancer" on the screen had a satisfactory week at the Palace.

Norma Shearer in "The Latest From Paris" was well patronized at the Fountaine Square. Neighborhood houses found night business heavier than afternoons.

Philadelphia

STANLEY Theatres Jubilee Week in Philadelphia was a tremendous success and a marked increase was reflected in box office receipts at all of the theatres participating. There were added attractions and special features at each theatre, with bunting, flags and pennants galore, street parades in various sections of the city and tieups with large department stores.

At the Stanley, with Norma Shearer in "The Actress" on the screen and a dazzling array of entertainers in an elaborate stage presentation, "Venetian Nights" with versatile Buddy Page as master of ceremonies, featuring Bernioff and Eulalie, adagio dancers, The Three Whirlwinds Serova Dancers and four vocal soloists, enthusiastic audiences all week expressed their appreciation of the excellent bill.

The Fox also had an exceptionally good bill with "After the Storm" on the screen and on the stage Joe Fejer and his Gypsy Serenaders, Two Dark Knights, Florian Miller and Aubrey Lyles, Flo Adler and Ted Bradford, and Vivian Hart.

At the Carman, Donn Byrne's "Hangman's House" made a great hit with its romantic charm, while Count Berni Vici and his American Beauty Girls' Band alone would have provided a full evening's entertainment.

That "Mother Machree" which opened for an indefinite engagement at the Fox-Locus last week was a pronounced success was evidenced by the size of the audiences at each performance.

"Ramona," starring Dolores Del Rio, had its first local showing at the Aldine theatre and the performance was a memorable one. There were tieups with full window displays in two large Chestnut street stores.

"Old Ironsides" for the first time at popular prices at the Stanton drew good crowds.

The Arcadia featured Billie Dove in "The Heart of a Follies Girl" with a comedy film and Ray Bretz, baritone, as a special attraction.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres enjoyed a very good week on the whole.

Keith's Georgia got under way with flying colors the first day with a first class vaudeville bill and "Partners in Crime." A Berry Haxton vehicle which proved a really popular number.

Next door, the Capitol, did not complain as much as usual with a Denny picture, "Good Morning Judge." This was a bit better than he has made recently.

At the Howard "Drums of Love" brought in good box office returns. The men seemed to approve of this one [illegible] was offered.

Loew's Grand offered a good picture, "Diamond Handcuffs," which received praise for its unusual treatment. The house had a very good week.

The Rialto with "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" did not go over the top as it has [illegible] did not fall too hard.

"Midnight Madness" brought the Metropolitan a better week than usual.

The New Alamo is sticking for the most part to second runs [illegible] draw good business.

Seattle

ANOTHER quiet week among the big showhouses, with warm weather to compete with the theatres for the public taste. The leading attraction, beyond doubt, was "Street of Sin" at the Seattle Theatre, which played to fairly good business, but still was far from a big gross-getter. Popular with the many Jannings fans. The Publix stage show was highly entertaining, as usual, and Jules Buffano, master of ceremonies, scored with his band and solo specialties.

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre, "The 50-50 Girl" was just a mediocre attraction. Daniels is failing to score here to any extent because of poor film material, and the picture was not very widely praised. Fanchon and Marco's stage revue, Russian in theme, was not very popular either. A local style revue helped matters somewhat, but it was a program below par and the box office was light.

"Czar Ivan the Terrible" managed to play to a slightly larger gross than has been the custom at the Columbia recently, but still could not be considered a strong box office film. It was interesting, but hardly entertaining to most audiences. A week a little better than average.

At the United Artists Theatre, "Shepherd of the Hills" played to very slight business. It was not much of a picture and failed to get by with the public. Business below normal.

"The Sporting Age" at Hamrick's Blue Mouse was a mediocre picture, also, but it was built up with a strong and long supporting program of Vitaphone and Movietone reels, so the audiences were satisfied. Business was good, everything considered, but not what it has been during other recents weeks.

"Hold 'Em Yale" at the Orpheum was a popular attraction and business showed a slight increase, combined with a fairly good stage program. Pantages did just so-so with "The News Parade." Neighborhood business has dropped off very noticeably.

"Wings" played its second and final week of two-a-day $1.65 top at the Metropolitan, where business was just moderate.

New Orleans

DOWNTOWN first run motion picture houses experienced a drop off in attendance last week as compared with the week previous. Torrential rains fell for several days during the early part of the week and this is blamed by theatre managers. Excellent summer weather prevailed the latter part of the week and this saved the houses, especially those equipped with modern cooling systems.

The new Saenger Theatre featured Ramon Navarro in "A Certain Young Man," and drew the best of whatever business was done. The stage show was also better than the average.

The Orpheum's business spurted during the week. "The Skyscraper," featuring William Boyd, was the cinema attraction and coupled with five big vaudeville acts made the program a most entertaining one.

Loew's State Theatre showed Karl Dane and George K. Arthur in "The Detectives," but it seems that local theatregoers have seen too much of these comedians lately. The stage bill was a strong one, however.

"The Girl From Chicago" was the Strand Theatre feature and business was fair.

Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was the Liberty theatre feature and drew well despite the fact that the picture had its local premiere here several years ago.

The local public parks have been offering many free attractions since the advent of summer and this hurt theatre attendance considerably. A new $300,000 swimming pool, too, is drawing them to the parks.

Special prize nights, bathing revues and neighborhood talent shows have done an excellent business for the neighborhood theatres. These houses have been featuring many productions produced by independent companies of late.

This season has been one of the worst ever experienced by playhouses of the city. Many theatres have closed. These include the Crescent, Palace and Tulane, all of which featured motion pictures in addition to stage shows.

Kansas City

THERE was no reason for it, in so far as pictures, exploitation or weather were concerned, but this week's attendance at first run houses of Kansas City was much better than the previous week. The public recently has kept Kansas City exhibitors guessing. What has had the earmarks of several strong lineups of pictures downtown have resulted in inglorious "flops," or, at least, disappointments, while many pictures which were expected to be more or less ordinary program pictures have pulled big.

"The Crowd" at Loew's Midland was given a bit more newspaper advertising and, as was expected, went over good, attracting large crowds throughout the week.

"Modern Mothers" at the Uptown also had a good week, as did "A Certain Young Man" at the Newman, featuring Ramon Novarro.

At the Liberty, "The Road to Ruin," depicting the sex tragedies of youth, did a good business all week.

Milton Sills in "The Hawk's Nest" at the Mainstreet played to a week's attendance slightly better than the average, which also can be said of "Comrades" at the Capitol.

"The News Parade" at the Pantages enjoyed an exceptionally good week.

Aside from the Midland's newspaper advertising campaign, nothing out of the ordinary in exploitation was resorted to by any of the other houses.

St. Louis

"WALKING BACK," featuring Sue Carol, Richard Walling, Robert Edeson, held the screen at the St. Louis theatre, Grand Boulevard at Delmar Boulevard, through a very good week, everything considered. There was a good supporting vaudeville bill.

Just acros the alley at Skouras Brothers Grand Central theatre the Vitaphone feature "Glorious Betsy" closed a fourth and final successful week. Al Jolson in "Ten Minutes of Song" headed the Vitaphone short subject program. Without doubt Vitaphone is firmly entrenched in the St. Louis amusement scheme of things.

The Missouri theatre at Grand and Lucas avenue with Frank Fay master of ceremonies on the stage and "The Hawk's Nest" on the screen had a very good week. Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon had the leading roles in the screen feature.

Coming down town we discovered that Loew's State at Washington avenue and Eighth street was featuring as its screen attraction "Across to Singapore" with Ramon Novarro as the big star.

Skouras Brothers Ambassador at Seventh and Locust streets had on its screen Richard Barthelmess in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." Aided by one of Ed Lowry's good stage shows it had an excellent week.

Cincinnati

ALTHOUGH a slight improvement in business was experienced during the past week, it was not such as to cause anyone to become jubilant.

Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," held over for the second week at the Capitol, headed the list for attendance as was the case during the first seven days of the engagement.

The Albee with "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," with Richard Barthlemess, in addition to an elaborate stage presentation, did somewhat better than the week previously, but, at that, the returns were not up to the high water mark by any means.

"Bringing Up Father," at Keith's, only netted fair returns, although the picture had the benefit of extensive advertising from a stage show which played the city in the recent past.

The Lyric, with George Bancroft in "The Dragnet," attracted quite good crowds for the week, but there were always plenty of good seats to be had at every performance.

Sue Carol, in "Walking Back" at the Strand, together with some very good short subjects on the same bill, didn't seem to get 'em in the same manner that they usually come to this house.

The Family, with "Finders, Keepers," first half, and "The Matinee Idol," second half, did a fairly good business for both engagements.

The Palace, pictures and vaudeville, had a somewhat better business than usual, the Monday returns being especially good, due, no doubt, to the personal appearance of Charlie Murray for that day.

The entire week was an unusually rainy one, and the exhibitors like to blame the weather for the poor business. However, there is considerable unemployment throughout the city, which does not help matters any in the box office.

Milwaukee

BUSINESS resumed its normal trend this week and things were average in practically all the down town theatres. The weather was cold and raining at the beginning of the week, but in spite of this business was fairly good.

The Davidson played "Simba" for one week to very good houses.

"The Yellow Lily" at the Wisconsin found very appreciative audiences and a brisk week was the result.

"The Port of Missing Girls" at the Merrill played to fair houses.

"Ramona" completed its second week at the Garden with a very creditable record. It continued to draw exceedingly well up to the end of its run.

"The Spotlight" at the Alhambra found business fairly lively and brought in good receipts.

"The Big Killing" at the Strand had a successful week.

"Alex the Great" at the Riverside was considered one of the strongest features on the bill and was instrumental in drawing good business.

"Don't Marry" was the photoplay feature at the Orpheum and was a very popular number on the bill.

Neighborhood theatres lagged behind the down town houses in amount of business during the week. "The Patent Leather Kid" was featured at the five Midwesco pre-release houses and succeeded in bringing in fair business.

"The Family Upstairs" drew well at the Venetian.

"We Americans" at the Egyptian was well attended.

Albany

CONSIDERING the fact that daylight saving is cutting down on the night crowds at all motion picture theatres, the business done by several of the houses in Albany last week measured up to expectations of the owners.

At the Mark Strand, "Drums of Love" had the crowds standing practically every night at the second show with matinees running just about fair. Even Tuesday night, which is one of the worst nights of the week in Albany, the theatre was well filled. The two Vitaphone presentations, featuring Billy and Elsie Newell, in "Songs and Wit" and May MacAvoy and E. E. Horton in a skit, appeared to give general satisfaction.

The Leland found "Hangman's House" a good business getter and one that filled the house each night.

At the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, the box office did excellent business with "The Opening Night" and "The College Hero," this house featuring first run double features. The Mark Ritz went over well last week with "Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath."

Business was fairly good at practically all of the subsequent run houses in Albany, while Proctor's Grand used Johnny Hines in "Chinatown Charlie" along with its vaudeville.

"The Jazz Singer," even though it had run a straight week with a return week at the Mark Strand, proved again that it could draw thousands to Harmanus-Bleecker Hall.

The weather conditions were favorable to the theatres, rain falling a good part of the week with weather cool. Business fell off on Saturday on account of a circus in town.

In the neighboring city of Troy the annual convention of the State Conference of Mayors, which also brought many city clerks, was reflected in the increased attendance at downtown houses, although a parade on Thursday afternoon shattered all hopes of a good matinee that day.

The Troy theatre did well with May McAvoy in "The Little Snob," coupled with the Vitaphone. Proctor's Troy theatre used "A Night of Mystery" to good effect along with its vaudeville.

Lon Chaney in "The Big City" went over fine during the first half of the week at the Loncoln and turned in more money than did "The Desert Bride" the last half. The American is using first run features, changing daily and doing well.

Minneapolis

THE critics razzed "The Yellow Lily" at the Minnesota theatre last week, but the crowds seemed to like it and it did a rattling good business. "Taka Chance," featuring the Ritz Brothers and Alex Hyde, the new master of ceremonies, was the Publix stage unit attraction.

Ramon Novarro in "A Certain Young Man" didn't prove an exceptional box office attraction.

Milton Sills in "The Hawk's Nest" at the Lyric did about the average business.

Pantages showed "The Wizard," with Edmund Lowe, in conjunction with its vaudeville program, and found it a good drawing card.

George Bancroft came into the Grand in "The Showdown" for a second run and attracted good crowds. "Freckles" was the Hennepin-Orpheum's picture, and probably lured a good many Stratton-Porter admirers into the theatre. The Seventh Street pleased its patrons with "Under the Black Eagle."

Among the neighborhood theatres, the American showed "Legion of the Condemned" with good results, while the Lyndale, Lagoon, Rialto, Arion and Loring were shwing such pictures as "Red Hair," "Devil Dancer," "Mad Hour," "Feel My Pulse" and "The Crowd" to about the average number of customers.

Edith Taliaferro in "Little Old New York" offered some competition at the Shubert, where she is a guest star, but the biggest competition was the dedicatory series of recitals on the new organ at the Minneapolis auditorium. About 25,000 persons attended these three concerts.

Harrisburg, Pa.

RETURN of cool and generally fair weather proved a boon to the Harrisburg theatres which, with additional drawing power of well selected plays, enjoyed an exceptionally profitable week.

Adolphe Menjou and Evelyn Brent, in "A Night of Mystery," packed them in at the Victoria, where the play, besides its recognized merit, had additional attraction because of the widespread newspaper publicity given to Menjou's recent picturesque Paris wedding.

"Circus Rookies," with Carl Dane and George K. Arthur, was the offering at Loew's Regent, and had a punch which kept the box office cash register jingling throughout the whole six-day period.

At the Colonial the sprightly comedy, "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath," with Dot Mackaill and Jack Mulhall, who have built up a big Harrisburg following, showed to houses in which there was scarcely ever a vacant chair.

The film attraction at the State the last three days was Sally Phipps in "The News Parade," which was well liked. The Broad Street offered a double bill featuring "Stage Kisses," with Helene Chadwick and Kenneth Harlan, and the Western thriller, "Wild Born," with Tex Maynard.

A return to Harrisburg of the Douglas Fairbanks play, "The Gaucho," brought good financial results at the Russell.

An important factor that probably added to the attendance at all the movie theatres was that it was the first week following the close of a successful run of thirty-five weeks by the Morgan Wallace Players in stock at the Majestic, which will be dark for the rest of the summer.

Dallas

THE past week brought fair business to the Dallas theatres, and only one theatre reported unusually good business.

At the Palace "The Fifty-Fifty Girl" featuring Bebe Daniels, proved to be the draw of the week, and business was unusually good at both matinees and evening performances throughout the week. The greater part of this business, however, was due to the extra attraction, Gene Dennis, the world famous school girl psychic, in person, who more than pleased her audiences.

"The Main Event" starring Vera Reynolds and Charles Delaney at the Majestic fell a little below the usual weekly Majestic gross. A good Interstate vaudeville bill completed the well bked program.

At the Melba "The Garden of Eden" starring Corrine Griffith enjoyed a good business, but was a little under the good receipts of last week. Business done at the Melba the past few weeks shows that the Melba has established a patronage that can be depended upon.

At the Capitol "Their Hour" with John Harron and June Marlowe proved only a fair draw and totals for the week were low.

"The Hawk's Nest" with Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon brought average business to the Old Mill and maintained the steady gross of the past few weeks at this theatre.

At the Arcadia "Rose Marie," "Sadie Thompson," "Wife Savers" and "The Showdown" brought the usual good business to this house.

Tampa

BUSINESS [illegible] week was very satisfactory. There was some real hot weather, some rain and the election Tuesday, but the programs seemed to click with the customers and all houses report business well over the previous week.

"We Americans" was the feature of the Victory bill and it pulled nicely, though there was plenty more "added" attractions in the Vitaphone presentations, the Movietone [illegible] and the Vitaphone [illegible]. Tampa has fallen hard for "The Talkies."

Jannings pulled the business up nicely for the Tampa in his latest, "The Street of Sin," which was featured the first half. "The Actress" did well the last half.

The Strand had a satisfactory week, each of the three features used pulling just about the same. "The Tragedy of Youth" and "Fools for Luck" were used two days each and "Sally of the Scandals" used three.

Receipts took a jump this week for the Franklin. "Skinner's Big Idea" started the week in good shape, and both the second run pictures, "The Blue Danube" and "The Smart Set" pulled 'em. "The Cherokee Kid" used one day only did about average.

New York City

Cleveland

IT RAINED every day last week. Not the soft warm spring rain you read about, but a cold, damp, steady downpour that would encourage even the ducks and the fishes to stay under cover. As a result, none of the theatres did very much business. By comparison, a fair house was considered very good business, so the reports of the week's business is not a fair basis on which to judge the pulling powers of the pictures presented.

"The Legion of the Condemned," a picture of real thrills and tense moments, was well liked by those who attended the Stillman theatre, and was recommended by the professional reviewers as offering both excitement and entertainment.

"His Tiger Lady," combined with the Publix Revue "Knick Knacks" pleased the army of Menjou admirers who are on tip toe right now in anticipation of Menjou's personal appearance in the city next week. The picture, which has some delicious comedy as well as some dramatic love moments, proved satisfactory and business was good, considering the handicap of continued rain.

"The Hawk's Nest" did satisfactory business at Keith's Palace, surrounded by an unusually good vaudeville bill. The success of the picture lies in its excitement, and fast action, and proved to be listed by the public as one of Milton Sills' best recent pictures.

"Fools for Luck" highly diverting comedy, played to business that was fair under the circumstances of bad weather. Under ordinary circumstances the picture would have gone over big, as it has the elements of popular entertainment.

"Hold 'Em Yale," bright, breezy comedy, with plenty of college atmosphere, got by at Keith's East 105th St. with a fair average. It deserved splendid business and would have had it with favorable weather.

Reade's Hippodrome had only fair business with "The Desert Bride," melodrama of love in the desert, was just moderately successful the first half of the week, and "Flying Luck," pleasing comedy, met a similar fate the last half of the week.

"The Crimson City," playing simultaneously at the Cameo and the Circle, proved to be a moderately interesting program picture and did just fair business.

"Wings" continued to do consistently satisfactory business at the Colonial where it has been playing at road show prices for eight weeks.

San Francisco

SATURDAY, Sunday and Monday, in spite of the wonderful motoring weather, Loew's Warfield, the Granada and the Golden Gate theatres were compelled to hold the crowds back. Seasonal decline being contemplated by the managers and theatre owners, added strength was given to programs of local theatres, generally.

The biggest noise of the week was caused by two theatres, namely, at Loew's Warfield with the Fanchon & Marco Idea, named "Bird Ideas," and at the Golden Gate where Nazimova appeared in person in a playlet, "India," based on the book "Mother India."

The picture shown at Loew's Warfield, "The Yellow Lilly," also helped crowd that theatre and while the acting in "Midnight Madness," shown at the Golden Gate, was considered exceptional, the picture itself was not considered good. All week these two theatres had exceptional crowds attending both evenings and afternoons.

"His Tiger Lady," as shown at the Granada theatre, drew well as Menjou always does in this city. The Publix Revue helped attract crowds, but not as well as the presentation acts shown a few months ago.

"Sunrise" drew many to the St. Francis theatre and was considered a popular picture. "Across the Atlantic," shown at the California theatre, did not draw many. The picture, however, is not considered the reason for the small attendance. In a few days this theatre will close.

The Union Square theatre did exceptionally well with "The Girl From Gay Paree," "When George Hops," shown together with vaudeville acts.

Exceptionally good business was reported by Manager Loy of the Alexandria theatre with the showing of "The Student Prince" and by Manager Crosby of the Coliseum theatre, which presented "The Wagon Show," together with "Coliseum Variety Ideas," being better than the average.

Portland

IN spite of a continuance of the warm weather and the opening of a number of outside attractions the first-run houses show a decided improvement over the previous week. While no records were anywhere near equalled, film offerings showed a decided improvement, and naturally better business resulted.

"We Americans" opened on Memorial Day at "The Columbia" and did a nice business, and continued to hold up during the balance of the week. In addition, Manager Bert Levy secured the original musical score, which Joseph Sampietro and his all-artist orchestra rendered in splendid fashion.

Richard Barthelmess has always proved popular here, but never more so than in "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which helped the box office at "The Broadway" materially. Fanchon & Marco's presentation "Japa-Knees" proved to be one of the best of their long list of clever ideas. George Stoll and his Broadway band put on some novelty musical numbers, including a surprise bell ringing offering.

The Sunday morning concerts continue to draw well at the Rivoli, under the master hand of Salvatore Santaella, who gave selection from "My Maryland" and "If I Were King" overture. This week he was assisted by John Uppman, baritone of American Opera Company. The film "Mad Hour" was not up to previous offerings. Robert C. Bruce in person showed three intensely interesting films, Mt. Hood, Mt. St. Helens and the Matterhorn peaks.

"Happy" Phil Lampkin "pepped" up the Portland stage band, and one wishes he had only dropped in before. He seems to be just what is needed for warm weather blues. "Milady's Fan" was unfolded to the gaze of increased patronage, and they all stayed and were again thrilled with "Across to Singapore."

Vitaphone acts on this week's Blue Mouse bill included "The Morrissey and Miller Night Club," Jimmy Lyons in "The General of Hilarity" and the Florentine choir were well received, as also did Monte Blue in "Across the Atlantic." Standing room only was invariably the rule at evening performances at this house, and afternoon performances also drawing well.

Tebbett's "Oriental," the only first run East Side house, brought out the first of their big five films for June, Marie Prevost in "The Rush Hour" and increased attendance found it a wide-open comedy as billed. John Thomas, lyric baritone, headed the stage presentation entitled "Ship Ahoy," and carried out the theme with well chosen numbers.

Pantage's film offering for the week was "The News Parade," bringing two strangers, Nick Stuart and Sally Phipps as stars. They'll do.

Baltimore

ALTHOUGH the weather varied from cool with rain to warm with rain during the week beginning Monday, June 4, several first-run houses here did excellent business throughout the entire six days.

"The Garden of Eden," starring Corinne Griffith with Charles Ray in the leading male part, proved a surprise at Loew's Century for it did an excellent business throughout the week and pulled the flapper crowds in strong. Flapperettes with Ted Claire was the stage presentation attraction.

At Warners' Metropolitan "Glorious Betsy," with Vitaphone accompaniment and dialogue, proved an excellent attraction for its third week at that house and warranted it being held for a fourth week.

"Sadie Thompson," starring Gloria Swanson, pulled them in heavily at Loew's Valencia for each of the six days afternoons as well as evenings and practically all who have seen it think it Miss Swanson's best work.

"Czar Ivan the Terrible," a Sovkino production, presented at the Little theatre by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., went along good during the second week of its engagement there.

Variable business was done by "Hangman's House" at the New theatre with a stage act called "College Capers." The week started out good, which lasted for about three days, then gradually dwindled to fair at the end of the week.

"Ladies Must Dress," co-featuring Virginia Valli and Nancy Carroll, proved an enjoyable attraction at the Keith-Albee New Garden with six acts of Keithe-Albee high class vaudeville with Francis X. Bushman, Jr., as the headliner. This bill did not prove as strong as expected and business through the week was only fair. But Nancy Carroll deserves honorable mention for her work, for it can be seen that she is a comer.

"The Fifty-Fifty Girl," starring Bebe Daniels, with a stage presentation act called the "Song and Dance Frolic," proved a poor patron puller at the Stanley. While the picture was interesting, the strength of Bebe Daniels did not appear big enough to fill that 4,000 seater.

It could only be called a so-so week at the Keith-Albee Hippodrome where "Their Hour," with John Harron, Dorothy Sebastian and June Collier was the feature film attraction with the Marty Dupree revue in its second week. Business was fairly good during the whole week.

Ottawa

EXHIBITORS of Ottawa, Ontario, struck two snags during the week of June 4 in a spell of hot weather and also the spring meet of the Connaught Park Jockey Club, the crowds chasing out to the track to wager on the bangtails. But the theatres did not do badly, thanks to good features.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh" was truly an attraction at the Regent theatre, although it did not please everybody because of certain phases of its theme. The Canadian Government "Muskieland" reel, which played the Paramount theatre, New York, long ago, aroused high praise.

B. F. Keith's theatre had an excellent human interest feature in "Skyscraper." Good crowds revelled in its thrills and comedy.

Adolphe Menjou drew more than average crowds to the Imperial theatre, where he appeared in "A Night of Mystery," a chilling mystery for hot nights.

Manager Don Stapleton started the week with "The Irresistable Lover" without announcing the title and the "Take-a-Chance Week" idea drew many people. It stands to the credit of the picture that patronage held up all week.

Opinions on Pictures

A Certain Young Man

Not So Hot

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU'LL never believe this one. It has all the earmarks of being an old-fashioned picture and according to all the "dope" it was made a couple of years ago and has been reposing on the shelf ever since. Its the type of story which is not adaptable to Ramon Novarro's personality and talent. Trying to make him a young sophisticate—a boyish Menjou doesn't click so well.

The idea presents a bored youth who is pursued relentlessly by a flock of feminine admirers. He sort of high-hats them, but does fall for the charms of a particularly pretty young thing whose sincerity and wholesomeness are as alluring as the make-believe tactics of the others are false.

There are some attractive shots interspersed here and there. But these are the total assets aside from Marceline Day's winsomeness in registering the love interest. The film may be O. K. for average houses, but the folks are going to say—"Ramon, how come?"

Drawing Power: Novarro's name. Suitable for average houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up Novarro and Marceline Day and bill as romance.

THEME: Romance of bored youth who after high-hatting all of the girls falls for a real charmer because of her wholesomeness and simplicity.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn. Length, six reels. Released, June, 1928. The Cast: Ramon Novarro, Marceline Day, Renee Adoree, Carmel Myers, Bert Roach, Huntley Gordon, Ernest Wood, Hobart Henley.

The News Parade

Not Much to it—Acted Spiritedly

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A TID-BIT of a picture is exposed on the screen in "The News Parade," which, while it travels on a pretty thin thread, at least, has the merit of establishing something different in idea if not in execution of it. The cameraman who operates the news reels is capitalized here with Nick Stuart, one of the promising young fellows making good under the Fox banner. It happens that Nick in his brief screen career was once a cameraman. Naturally he injects sufficient enthusiasm and sincerity to make his role genuine. The young man made a very good impression in "High School Hero."

"The News Parade" takes him on an assignment to catch a wealthy man who is averse to photographers. Nick not only gets his man, but also the daughter. But before he accomplishes the heart stuff he has to do some heroic rescue work.

The picture has some interesting shots of New York with Nick doing some thrilling work atop a skyscraper or three. It also presents winter sports at Lake Placid and finishes off at Palm Beach and Havana. It is mostly pretty travelogue touched up with an itsy-bitsy romance.

Drawing Power: Should appeal with young folks. Suitable for everyday type of house. Exploitation Angles: Bill as romantic comedy of cameraman. Play up Nick Stuart and Sally Phipps.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, six reels. Released, May, 1928. The Cast: Nick Stuart, Sally Phipps, Brandon Hurst, Earl Foxe, Truman H. Talley, Cyril Ring, Franklyn Underwood. Director, David Butler.

United States Smith

A Human Story With Action A-Plenty

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

GOTHAM has a story with plenty of box-office appeal in this one. It is adapted from a Gerald Beaumont story and they are always very human. There is a prize-fight for the championship service, with all of the exciting incidents leading up to it; there is the friendship of the little waif and the champion of the Marines to create sure-fire sentiment and there is romance and rivalry running all the way through it.

Eddie Gribbon is Sergeant Steve Riley, champion of the Marines and Mickey Bennett becomes "United States Smith," mascot of the Marines. Kenneth Harlan is Corporal Jim Sharkey, Steve's rival for championship honors and also for the love of Lila Lee, who plays Molly Malone. The entire cast does some exceptionally good work, with Gribbon, however, carrying off first honors.

It is a picture that fairly abounds in action and comedy situations that are far above the average. Also the tale is unfolded cleverly and never for a moment is the interest allowed to lag. There is a lot of sentimental hokum in it, but it is of the type that always goes over well. The championship fight with Gribbon and Harlan as the principals has all the earmarks of a real battle. It is put on realistically and without the usual number of knock-downs that characterize these screen battles. All in all it is a picture that is almost sure to click.

Drawing Power: It has all the necessary elements that should make it popular in nearly every type of house. Exploitation Angles: The prize fight for the championship of the U. S. Service departments offers ready exploitation, as does the all-around good work of the cast.

THEME: Comedy drama in which rival champions of different branches of the service are also rivals for the hand of the girl. The waif who becomes mascot of the marines saves the honor of the champion when the latter is induced to "sell out" to give the youth an education.

Produced and distributed by Gotham Productions. Length 6600 feet. Released June 15, 1928. Directed by Joseph E. Henabery. Screen play by Curtis Benton. Supervised by Harold Shumate. The Cast: Eddie Gribbon, Lila Lee, Kenneth Harlan, Earle Mayo.

Tempest

O. K. From Any Angle

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE Russian [illegible] to Hollywood and [illegible] dramatic theme of a lowly peasant daring to make love to an aristocratic girl and being stripped of [illegible] been advanced to an officer's commission in the army—it all makes a well-rounded entertainment. The picture serves in presenting John Barrymore [illegible] romantic role one is [illegible] impression to some excellent pantomime. Some of his acting has rich pathos in it, especially during his sojourn in prison. The picture also serves in introducing Camilla Horn in her first American-made role. As the temperamental aristocrat she also contributes a performance [illegible] shadings.

The story tells of a peasant who is elevated from the ranks to a commission in the army. He encounters a girl of the aristocrats and is promptly humiliated when he forgets his lowly station. Events transpire rather dramatically for the revolution ensues and the girl is reduced to poverty.

The moods of the story permit the principals to indulge in plenty of by-play and emotion. It is nicely mounted and teems with realistic scenes. And it holds the interest in a good embrace all of the way. As for the supporting cast—well, trust George Fawcett to turn in [illegible] performance. Which also goes for the others. The colorful settings, the costumes, the star and the [illegible] these should make it popular.

Drawing Power: Star's popularity, coupled with name of leading woman. For high class houses. Should be a hot favorite with women. Exploitation Angles: Billed as a fast-moving dramatic picture of army life in Russia and carrying tones of the Revolution it should draw. Names of principals will help, too.

THEME: Romantic drama of social barrier swept aside by love.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Length, eight reels. Released, May, 1928. Cast: John Barrymore, Camilla Horn, George Fawcett, Louis Wolheim, Ulrich Haupt.

The End of St. Petersburg

High Grade Film, But Not a Box-Office Bet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE serious Russians always view life with reality in their films. Here is "The End of St. Petersburg" which looms large as a very interesting piece of celluloid. It is compact. It is simple of design. And yet it has sweep and movement. The drama is effective and charged with creditable suspense, and taken altogether it is a picture which will stand up with the best of America's aside from technical features in which we are supreme.

The realism is impressive. The story follows the upheaval of the Russian monarchy and the rising of the Reds. It is exciting and builds well up to its concluding scenes. These, incidentally, are not so strong dramatically—giving way to a fairly good spread of propaganda. It lets down too much toward the end.

One of the striking notes of this Russian film is the photography. And another is the very creditable acting. But it hasn't any box-office touch. The picture wasn't made for any commercial market. Apparently the bear who walks like a man takes his art first and his roubles afterward. "The End of St. Petersburg" will appeal mostly to the intelligentsia and to the cities which have a large Russian population. It should be seen if for no other reason than to take stock of what other nations are accomplishing with camera and celluloid.

Drawing Power: Should draw with foreign populations, particularly Russians. Title has appeal. Exploitation Angles: Play up what Russians are doing in the film world. Bill as a true slice of Russian Revolution.

THEME: Drama of fall of Russian monarchy. Distributed by A. Hammerstein.

Life's Like That

Diverting Entertainment

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THERE is something different about "Life's Like That." And whatever it is elevates Fanchon Royer's initial independent production from an ordinary program picture to a departure which holds interest and entertains in spite of the fact that the pivot character is a middle-aged man who, having a wife, a daughter and a million dollars, can find nothing more important to do than to attempt suicide.

A phantom character, representing the audience, is in search of an incident, in passing, sufficiently interesting to follow as long as out of the ordinary things occur. In consequence, a young stranger reluctantly plunges to the rescue of a drowning man who seems to mean nothing in anybody's life. Thereafter, the two become constant companions and as romance seems to be what the older man desires most, he is eager to live when assured by the sophisticated youth that romance may be had for the asking, on condition that the millionaire provides himself with personal evidence of his prosperity. Unexpected happenings interrupt their progress and the story unwinds and winds back again to an amusing finis.

In lieu of fades, the promising young director has employed a shifting in and out of sequences in developing his action that simultaneously substitutes for narrative titles and stirs the spectator's concern. And, since the story combines tragedy with farce, this method lends peculiarly to the purpose.

"Life's Like That" adds new laurels, also, to Wade Boteler and Grant Withers in their respective roles of the poor rich man and his sophisticated young tutor in the art of flirtation. These boys click.

Drawing Power: Title, the best bet. Exploitation Angles: What money can't buy: Tie-ups with political campaigns.

THEME: Rich man with nothing to live for, but who becomes Mayor in spite of himself.

Produced by Fanchon Royer. Written and Directed by Raymond Cannon.

"Tall Timber"

(Universal—One Reel)

CARTOONIST WALTER DISNEY'S character, Oswald, "the lucky bunny," in this newest release, seems to have lost the protecting charm of the famed "rabbit foot," for he is sure let in on a raft of trouble. Disney sends Oswald on a pleasure trip into the mountain wilds, and then catapults him through a series of animated trials and tribulations, which will bring many laughs.

Oswald fancies himself quite a canoeist, and braves the raging rapids with almost disastrous results. He next tries his hand at hunting, and attempts to bring down some low-flying geese, but becomes so flustered that he shoots a hole in the bottom of the canoe. Fed up on water sports, Oswald takes a hike, with the ever-present jinx close on his trail. Huge boulders resenting his presence, give him a chase down the mountainside, which is picked up by a grizzly bear, who runs the rabbit into his den. A battle follows, from which Oswald emerges with a new bearskin coat.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

"Charles Gounod"

(James A. FitzPatrick—One Reel)

A TECHNICOLOR subject, this new release in James A. FitzPatrick's Famous Music Masters series, shows what entertainment results may be presented with the synchronization of music and voice for a color film. Reviewed at the Rialto, New York, "Charles Gounod" is practically perfect in the synchronization given it by the orchestra and three vocalists, who time their efforts to the action on the screen.

The story, adapted from Gounod's opera "Faust," pictures the courtship paid the fair Marguerite by Siebel and Faust. The former makes his plea with a bouquet of flowers to the accompaniment of Gounod's "Flower Song," and the latter speaks with jewels to the music of the "Jewel Song." Guided by Mephistopheles, Faust wins the heart of Marguerite. The technicolor photography emphasizes the elaborate costumes and the picturesque outdoor settings. A really high-class attraction.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

"Heavy Infants"

(F B O—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE three fatties—Messrs. Karr, Ross and Alexander—cavort and waddle in this comedy, a Larry Darmour production for F B O. The gags they use are pretty old, but they are reliable if not new. Slapstick, continual falls and the like have a pretty prominent place in the proceedings.

The fatties, in love with three heavy mammas, do their best to elope with them. Most of the comedy is made up of scenes of the girls' fathers trying to chase the fatties away from the homestead, but being persistent lovers they do not run until the fathers get the police force to lend them a hand. The three fat men and their mammas (equally fat) have a lot of hard, rough and tumble action. Their efforts make a fairly funny two-reeler.

"The Card of Destiny"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by George J. Reddy)

IT is rather difficult to find a Western story with any semblance of newness, and this featurette, presenting Fred Gilman, does not go very far in upsetting the rule. However, the producer has jammed into the two reels a more than usual amount of fast-moving outdoor action, interspersed with a pleasing romance that will make this film appealing to Western fans.

Denny (Fred Gilman), a Texas Ranger, is banking on winning the reward posted for the capture of Barron, a notorious border thief, in order to marry the girl, Alice. Barron and his henchmen, about to stage a mine shipment robbery, are spied by Denny and his Rangers, who give chase. Denny singles out the bandit chief, and during the fight which ensues Barron escapes and leaps into the car of the girl, who is on her way to town. Denny pursues Barron to a lonely cabin in the hills, where he is set upon by the gang, and is almost overpowered when his pals arrive and aid him in bringing the outlaws to justice, reaping the reward and the girl.

"Sandwiches and Tea"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by George J. Reddy)

ARTHUR LAKE'S sincere attempt at creating fun in this latest number of Universal's series of Drug Store Cowboy comedies, falls far short on the laughs. This chap just isn't given the stuff to work on, with the result that his comedies are of a hodge-podge type, which, of course, has its followers among the younger audience element.

Arthus has for long endeavored to make an impression on the beautiful Mary, and his big chance comes when he saves a girl from drowning. He tells Mary of the incident, and is hooted down by his wealthy rival, Billy Fox. When he tries to prove the fact by the girl he saved, Arthur is chased by her husky escort. All fares badly with our hero, until he again performs a rescue, this time the daughter of a rich and grateful banker, who offers Arthur the girl's hand in marriage. At this point, Mary, realizing she loves Arthur, steps into the scene and brings the film to the usually happy climax.

The Fern theatre had a fine box-office combination in "Riders of the Dark" and the first chapter of "Hawk of the Hills." The neighborhood crowds eat up Tim McCoy at every showing.

Manager P. J. Nolan was tickled with the returns for the program at the Rex theatre which included "Cyclone of the Range" and the final instalment of "Blake of Scotland Yard," along with a comedy and a news weekly.

A serial and an Art Accord thriller also brought the kids from six to 60 years of age trooping into the Columbia theatre, these comprising the final spasm of "Hawk of the Hills" and the feature, "Set Free."

Salt Lake City

THE Salt Lake down town picture theatres enjoyed a fairly satisfactory business last week regardless of the fact that out-of-door weather has set in.

The Capitol Theatre which offered "Hangman's House" in addition to the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation "Pet Bits," played to very good crowds.

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle in "Wickedness Preferred" did an average good business at the Pantages Theatre in addition to the regular vaudeville performance at this house.

The Paramount Empress Theatre reports having had a fair week during the showing of "The Hawk's Nest" with Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon.

Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" continued to break all house records during the second week of this production which is being offered with the Vitaphone and also the Movietone at the Victory Theatre.

Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" did fairly well as a second run at the American during the past week.

"Walking Back" with Sue Carol, Richard Walling, Robert Edeson and Ivan Bevedeff, is reported to have gone over exceptionally well at the Gem this past week.

"Old Ironsides" was the second run presentation at the Rialto Theatre with fairly crowded houses the rule.

The new State Theatre played to very good business during their showing of "What Price Glory" as a second run.

The Towers, a suburban house recently opened, did well with the second showing of "Freckles" during the past week, as did the Mission Neighborhood Theatre with Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight."

Salt Lake City

(Previous Week)

THEATRE business at the down town motion picture houses has held up fairly well here the past week considering the fact that local out of door resorts are opening right along now since the warmer weather has made its appearance.

"Drums of Love" proved to be a great drawing card at the Capitol, which also offered Fanchon and Marco's stage presentation "Pan Americana Idah" which did its share toward building up a very satisfactory attendance.

The Pantages Theatre offered "The Patsy" with very satisfactory results in addition to their regular vaudeville acts. Capacity houses here continue to be the general rule.

An outstanding event in theatrical circles last week was the opening at the Victory Theatre with the Vitaphone and Movietone in connection with Al Jolson's picture "The Jazz Singer." This performance received very favorable comment and packed the house.

The Paramount Empress Theatre enjoyed a fair share of patronage during their presentation of Billie Dove and Clive Brook in "The Yellow Lily."

Renee Adoree and Robert Frazer in "Back to God's Country" played to fairly large crowds at the American Theatre.

The second showing of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho" did fairly well at the Rialto here, as did "A Woman's Way" and "An Affair of the Follies" at the new State theatre.

"The Scarlet Dove" was well received at the Gem Theatre last week.

The Tower Theatre of this city featured Harold Bell Wright's famous story "The Shepherd of the Hills" with satisfactory results.

Des Moines

(Previous Week)

"THE DRAG NET," at the Des Moines theatre, played to good business, with the Vitaphone still holding out well as a drawing card. George Bancroft's draw is growing right along with splendid performances in previous pictures.

At the Capitol, "Street of Sin" did not prove a big drawing card, though the week did a pretty good average for this season. Jimmy Ellard, in the stage show "In Dutch," made a hit.

Detroit Convention of Operators a Success

Exhibits of Leading Manufacturers and Synchronized Pictures Hold Delegates Attention

THE Twenty-Ninth Convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada, held last week in the Tuller Hotel, Detroit, was a complete success in every sense of the word.

It was the concensus of opinion among the 800 odd delegates who convened that no convention previously held offered quite as much in the way of social activities as was contained in the program of entertainment arranged by the two Detroit sections of the I. A.

This endeavor to assure the success of the convention was not confined to the interested local unions alone but extended to all parties whose activities in any way were affected by those of the Alliance. It seemed as though everyone was concerned only with a desire to do everything possible to make each of the 800 delegates' visit a memorable one and despite four successive days of unseasonable weather it cannot be said that anyone suffered by lack of something to do.

A special treat was the musical program rendered by Edward Werner's Michigan Theatre Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Werner himself. So appreciative of the splendid music were the delegates assembled in the convention hall that encore after encore was riotously called for, the climax being reached when members of the Southern delegations completely lost control of themselves when the strains of "Dixie" rang through the hall.

A feature of the convention were the exhibits by leading equipment manufacturers. Among these were the New Peerless High-Low Intensity Reflector Arc Lamp by the J. E. McAuley Mfg. Co. of Chicago; the new heavy duty Simplex base by the International Projector Corp., which was sponsored by the local branch of the National Theatre Supply Co. under the direction of Manager Ernie Forbes; and the display of projection room equipment by the Brenkert Light Projection Co.

The Sentry Safety Control was exhibited and demonstrated, attached to a projector.

A most practical demonstration of the New Peerless High-Low Reflecting Arc was given several nights in succession when its powerful beam was observed shooting out of the Hotel Tuller, across the street to the Hotel Statler to the utter distraction of certain of the Statler's guests.

Two items absorbed the interest of the delegates in the meetings. One was the problem of synchronized pictures and the other concerned the election of a president. President Canavan, before the convention, announced his intention of not running again for the office and it was believed by all that he would adhere to his decision. Since no suitable presidential material was in sight, there was some conjecture as to who would be elected. During the course of the convention, however, President Canavan was prevailed upon to run again, finally giving his consent. The I. A.'s appreciation of his abilities was demonstrated once more when he polled nearly 700 votes out of about 800 cast.

The question of synchronized pictures seemed to be settled to the satisfaction of everyone. It was noted that the I. A. was to retain control of all the work incident to the actual working of the apparatus and that I. A. men only could be used as material to create the necessary technical staff required to produce such showings.

And so—for the time being at least—this matter of synchronized pictures is laid to rest as concern the I. A. There is no telling, however, what will be the developments in the industry by the time the next convention is called two years hence.

It seems to be the biggest problem of all just now and developments are certain to follow one another in quick succession.

The social activities of the convention culminated in a grand party at the Brenkert Factory on Thursday night after the delegates had attended a prize fight. Motor busses picked up the members at the Arena and conveyed them to the Brenkert factory for a practical demonstration of various types of projection equipment along with several things that could not rightly be classified as belonging to the projection room.

The house with a frontage of 80 feet, will be two stories in height, and have a seating capacity of 900 persons. A thirty-two foot stage is included in the plans. A $20,000 organ is to be installed. Pictures will probably be the main attraction, with occasional road shows playing the house. Ground was broken on May 23rd, and opening is expected before the close of the year.

Reports Equipment Sales On Increase

One of the indications that theatre equipment sales are picking up after rather a slow Spring, is the report from the Lakeside Company, manufacturers of complete ventilating equipment for theatres. This company reports that during the six weeks sales have been on the increase and that they predict their total business for the 1928 season to be as large, if not in excess, of previous years.

Theatre ventilating and atmospheric conditioning have become a pre-requisite for all houses that pretend to be at all up-to-date and have turned what normally was a dull season into one that rivals the winter for heavier attendance.

Why do the shrewdest ticket buyers in the country specify Gold Seal? Because Gold Seal has proved that it stands up longer, gives more satisfactory service and returns better value, dollar for dollar than old style registers. What better basis is there to choose your equipment on than that? You can't go wrong in following the lead of the country's best-known exhibitors. Specify the one best ticket register—the Gold Seal—and Gold Seal "Tickets That Fit."

Our Reserved Seat Ticket Plants in Boston and New York Can Save You Money. Get Our Estimates.

Educational Activities

Little Lorraine Rivero is "Big Boy's" "leading woman" in the four-year old star's first comedy on the 1928-29 program. Billy Sullivan and Eva Thatcher are the "grown-ups." Al St. John and Estelle Bradley are teamed in the leading roles of the initial Mermaid comedy in the series of 16 to be made this season. Others in the cast include Glen Cavender and Otto Fries, the latter a "heavy" often seen in Mermaids but who recently has been playing similar roles in features.

A Promotion

William Holland, an assistant director to William Watson, has been raised by the Christie studio to the rank of full-fledged director. His first picture was the initial Bobby Vernon release for the new season, "Hold 'Er Cowboy."

Editing

Martin G. Cohen, in charge of Tiffany-Stahl has assigned George Archainbaud to direct Jessel in "George Washington Cohen." Filming has already commenced, with Robert Edeson as one of the leads. T-R is also filming "The Albany Night Boat," with a cast including Olive Borden, Ralph Emerson and Jerry Miley, "A Grain of Dust" and "Beautiful But Dumb."

Directorial Assignments

Immediate assignments of Tiffany-Stahl directors are: "The Devil's Apple Tree," Elmer Clifton; "The Gun Runner," Edgar Lewis; "Beautiful But Dumb," Arthur Gregor; "The Albany Night Boat," Al Raboch; "The Naughty Duchess," Tom Terriss, and "The Rainbow," Reginald Barker. The story of the last-mentioned production is now almost completed by L. G. Rigby, who also wrote the stories for the other Barker productions, "The Toilers" and "Forward March." It is said that Eve Southern, the lady with the extremely long eye lashes, will be one of the leads in "The Naughty Duchess."

Mackaill-Mulhall

The new Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall co-starring film which First National will produce will be "Waterfront," a story of the docks. This is William A. Seiter's first directorial assignment under his long-term contract to Burbank.

Milton Sills' next picture, it is announced, will be a railroad tale by Frank L. Packard, entitled "The Wrecking Boss." Sills will begin his new virile role soon, having finished "The Barker."

New First National Films

New productions at the First National Burbank studios recently assigned are: Wm. Beaudine to film "Do Your Duty". John Francis Dillon to make "Scarlet Seas" . . . Alfred Santell to produce "Show Girl . . . William A. Seiter to direct "Waterfront" . . . Benjamin Christianson to megaphone "The Haunted House" . . . Alexander Korda to shoot "The Squall" . . . George Fitzmaurice to picturize "La Tosca" . . . and Mervyn LeRoy to do the direction of "Bluffers."

At the M-G-M Studio

"Brotherly Love," new M-G-M comedy co-starring Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, went into work last week with the selection of Jean Arthur for the feminine role. Is it necessary to report that Jean is no relation to George K.?

When William Haines begins his next picture role in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," he will be directed by Jack Conway. This crook story, which afforded H. B. Warner a successful stage characterization, will be entirely different from anything Haines has attempted heretofore.

Butler At it Again

From actor to director—and a good one at that. David Butler is now directing "Prep and Pep," a comedy of life at a boy's military school which he placed in production for Fox Films on May 21 with David Rollens and Nancy Drexel sharing the starring roles. The story, which tells how the academies develop self-reliance in a boy is the work of Butler, who wrote it in collaboration with William H. Conselman. Exteriors are to be taken at the Culver Military Academy, Culver, Ind.

More First National News

Contracts have been closed at First National's studio covering the acquisition of "The Milkman," an original by Adele Comandini, for Charlie Murray, who is now in the east on a vacation. . . . Johnny Hines' "The Wright Idea" will emerge from the cutting room any time now. The thrill scenes of the comedy were filmed aboard the yacht, Sultana. These, it is said, will provide novelty as one entire sequence was filmed in darkness. . . . Alexander Korda is directing Billie Dove for the third time in "His Wife's Affair." When this French mystery play appeared in New York one of its stars was Edmund Lowe. That was just before his entrance into motion pictures. . . . Opposite Dick Barthelmess in "Out of the Ruins" will be Marian Nixon.

Edeson with Columbia

Robert Edeson, 18 years in the flickers and with De Mille for five years, will appear in a Columbia production. This production, one of the few remaining on the Columbia 1927-28 program, will, incidentally, mark his 200th picture. He left the legitimate stage for the screen in 1910, having been behind the footlights for 10 years.

As the present vogue for mystery and melodrama is still ripe, Columbia is fashioning a picture of this type in "Beware of Blondes," being directed by George B. Seitz. This vehicle will be Dorothy Revier's fourth for the current season.

Tilting Jobs

George Marion, Jr., has been engaged by Paramount to title "The Sawdust Paradise," a story of street carnival life. Titles for the Paramount western, "The Vanishing Pioneer," are now being written by Julian Johnson, head of the studio title department.

The Busy Larry Darmour

The first of the 12 two-reelers Larry Darmour is making from the H. C. Witwer-Cosmopolitan Magazine stories of a chorus girl and a jockey has been completed and titled "Jessie"s James." Al Herman directed and the cast includes Alberta Vaughn, Al Cooke, Lewis Sargent, Willie Gray and Elinor Flynn.

Yachting

The first port of call on Cecil B. De Mille's recent seaward yachting cruise was Avalan, where photographers of the Grantland Rice Sportlight films took interesting shots of the newly refitted vessel. In the last fortnight of the cruise, Mr. De Mille plans to follow the tuna fishing, well beyond the ken of publicity hounds.

Jeanie Macpherson Vacations

All work on "The Godless Girl" completed at the De Mille, Jeanie Macpherson now intends to enjoy a well merited vacation at Cleveland, O., the home of her uncle, G. Ashley Tomlinson. Another "upper crust" portrayal can be chalked up to George Irving's credit, as recently he completed one of the important roles—that of the reform board chairman—in "The Godless Girl."

Columbia Titles

"Say it With Sables," announced some time back as a Columbia production, will be the title of the next picture to be placed into work at the Columbia studio. Frank Capra has been assigned to direct. The cast will be announced shortly.

QUALITY DEPENDABILITY STABILITY

Tiffany-Stahl renews the pledge made and carried out—of last year, to give to exhibitors pictures of the highest quality.

Tiffany-Stahl, to carry out this idea, have decided that instead of spending an enormous amount of money on elaborate fifty, sixty or seventy page highly colored and artistic inserts, can convey their message in a dignified way, and the money used in a manner that will do the most good—in their pictures.

Tiffany-Stahl have done what everyone said could NOT be done. Many were skeptical—but results have proven that they have given to the exhibitors MORE than they even promised.

Tiffany-Stahl delivered to exhibitors program pictures that in many instances EXCEEDED in quality and box office returns the so-called specials of other producing organizations.

PATHÉ REVIEW

¶We are living in a snappy age. Every day brings advancement—progress, new ideas, new thoughts, new hopes, new ambitions. ¶The old order passes. Yesterday's course may be a curse today. ¶Pathe Review, now under the guidance of Terry Ramsaye, author of "A Million and One Nights", aggressively incorporates the new spirit of the age. ¶The Pathe Review becomes up-to-date, somewhat sophisticated, turning away from the bees, the birds and the flowers to the modernism of man, and not forgetting the ladies. ¶Tone up your program with this reel of class and distinction, edited by a man who belives picture patrons are hungry for the real drama of life, who pay more than a nickel to see a film show and want it edited above nickelodeon standards.

SCREEN THE NEW PATHE REVIEW—Book it—boost it—and be on the band wagon that leads the parade of short subjects for the new season.

Pathé Review

52 ISSUES . . . ONE A WEEK

PATHÉ SUPER-SHORTS IN THE SPIRIT OF A NEW AGE—

¶The world is moving along at a fast clip. Yesterday's dreams are reality today. During the twenty-five years of motion picture history, old methods everywhere have been turned topsy-turvy. ¶Through all this period Pathe has been a trail blazer for short subjects. Pathe always has been first to strike the new notes, first to do the pioneering. The milestones bear the Rooster trademark. ¶Competition for Pathe News has been served to accentuate its tremendous hold on the public. People who see just a news reel demand to see The News Reel—Pathe News. Mack Sennet has been King of Comedy for more than fifteen years. Now he builds a great modern studio for his super-comedies. The Grantland Rice Sportlights has run away with all competition, and they go on getting better as sport interest increases. Topics of the Day has outclassed all other similar subjects and sent them to the morgue. Aesop's Film Fables are easily the leader in cartoon subjects. Pathe Review under Terry Ramsaye's guidance keeps stride with modernism. Pathe serials take on the glamour of the snappy age. ¶And the Rooster heralds a new product—Smitty and His Pals, 10 two-reel comedies acted by lovable kids, based on the syndicated cartoons by Berndt, appearing in scores of newspapers. The Tired Business Man, Handy Andy and Dan the Taxi Man, 6 two-reel comedies in each series. 300 Pathe Shorts—business builders—the backbone of your program.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
President,
Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir:

Co-incidental to laying out my program of pictures for the next two months I wish to state that I constantly refer to "The Check-Up" for the percentage value of box office reports, which has always been my faithful assistant in determining when and how to place my pictures.

I have always found this Check-Up a source of accurate information on box office value of all pictures that I have played, with very few exceptions.

I also wish to comment on the change and rearrangement that has been made in the release chart. Now I find I need but the one paper as the Motion Picture News contains all the necessary information for the proper handling of all booking of pictures.

I cannot conceive of any manager of a theatre being without these two departments and the Motion Picture News in general, as I consider this paper my very able assistant manager.

Yours very truly,

L. L. CHAMBERLAIN

The Important Company

it seems like FIRST NATIONAL has all the hits –

"The Strange Case of CAPTAIN RAMPER" breaks big at Roxy, N. Y., and then goes greater at McVickers, Chicago, and is grabbed up by Adams, Detroit; Missouri, St. Louis, for extended runs.

BILLIE DOVE in "The Yellow Lily," lifts N. Y. Strand business and boosts gross $2,000 at The Stanley, Baltimore, Maryland.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS in "The Wheel of Chance", an Alfred Santell production from the pair that made the Patent Leather Kid bids fair to be the biggest money maker they've turned out since that tremendous hit.

MILTON SILLS in "The Hawk's Nest" is by far one of the finest, most thrilling dramas of underworld and regeneration, ever made. Reaping a harvest right now in the country's finest theatres.

VARIETY sez:

"'HAPPINESS AHEAD' is a sweet feature for any time of year! turned loose when the major companies are short of good product, it stands out like a hole in one"

[Read Every Word of this Complete Review]

Plenty of laughs, a tear and a corking story. A program gem anywhere from the de luxe houses to the sure seaters because no type of audience can or will muff it. It's the best one Miss Moore has had in an age and worthy of the Rivoli or Rialto on Broadway for a try at a grind run.

Edmund Goulding did the story, Benjamin Glazer the scenario, W. A. Seiter directed and Miss Moore and Edmund Lowe troupe in it, and how! That's a lineup that impresses on sight and one that has more than equalled its potential paper strength in celluloid.

Picture has a little bit of everything and never stands still. Seiter has put this film together right, without wasting a foot. And it never turns you loose. Starts out fast, gets funny, then serious, and ends by bringing a lump to the throat—and nobody dies.

It looks like Seiter's answer to Vidor's "The Crowd." The pictures are not unlike each other with the general entertainment advantage in this one's favor. Looking at "The Crowd" was like reading Dreiser, powerful, ponderous, slow and too true. If you like it you're for it 100 per cent; if you don't you're fed up within 100 pages or two reels.

There's no in between. "Happiness Ahead" is in a lighter vein, but studded with character and situation shadings and played to the hilt by Miss Moore and Lowe.

No one in pictures can look at a man like Lowe and roll what he means, his entire mental makeup and character, into one glance. And he gets many an opportunity here as a card table specialist who has been taking the moneyed boys with a show girl (Lilyan Tashman) as the apartment come-one. A spat with the dame, culminating in her telling the victim he's been cheated, forces Lowe to a hideaway in a small town where he starts eyeing the high school girls. Picking out Miss Moore, daughter of the hardware store proprietor, Lowe has the village's younger set in a furore whence Miss Moore's innocence finally forces him into a declaration of marriage to her family.

Not caring particularly for Miss Moore, other than she's something he can't quite get, and whose naivete is unconsciously disarming him, Lowe goes through with the church weding under hit and run intentions and is impressed by his first real look at the maid of honor on the way out. Back to New York and in a flat, Mary's love and happiness in her home starts to get under Lowe's skin. He goes to work in a brokerage office. Whence, up pops his former mistress who threatens to put his former victim on his trail again if he doesn't come back to her, and she does.

In the midst of celebrating his birthday with Mary at home, in walks a detective with a warrant. Lowe frames with the cop not to let Mary know, both say it's business and friends bail him out. But when it comes time for him to do six months, Lowe writes a number of letters for a pal to mail who is going to Buenos Aires, and exits on that pretense.

It's strange but plausible to the girl until the detective thinks she should be tipped off and returns to tell her while her parents are visiting in Lowe's absence. A visit to the prisoner shows Mary the former chorister asking for Lowe as "Mrs. Stewart," the two conversing through the wired gate. She returns home without talking to her husband and remains silent, with the letters still coming in from South America.

The day Lowe gets out, he brings back a shawl and a Spanish comb for his bride, tells her all about the country and Mary gets a returned picture of him from the vindictive Kay which Lowe discovers. Realizing that Mary must know where he's been, Lowe starts to insist on telling her the truth as she frantically tries to stop him, finally showing him a small stocking as the reason. That's the finish.

Cast is air tight from Miss Moore to Diane Ellis who plays the former's chum and is the maid of honor. Lowe gives a performance that ranks with his "Dressed to Kill" and Miss Moore gets a chance to do a little bit of everything from her familiar adolescent comedy kid to pathos.

This girl has always been able to act, and given a story that means something after a pretty long wait, has leaped at the chance to more than make good.

Miss Tashman looks and does well as the gal who won't lay off Lowe, while Edythe Chapman and Charles Sellon make their minor roles as Mary's parents mean something. Robert Elliott's bit as the detective is also in tune.

Entire production splendid with an occasional rich interior dotting the course. Photography is also of high grade and the titles are excellent.

"Happiness Ahead" is a sweet feature for any time of year. Turned loose when the major companies are short of good program product it stands out like a hole in one.

Danger Signals

The Rule of Quality and the "Sound" Field

By William A. Johnston

NOW that the sound movie is racing madly down the motion picture highway, it may be well to hang out some danger signals.

First, let us speak of production.

The Strand Theatre, New York, has on an all-sound movie bill; and we recommend to visiting exhibitors that they take a seat there and study the audience reaction.

The audience is highly pleased. No question about that. They eat it up. But they are not as critical—not nearly so—as they have grown to be of the silent drama. They want sound, action, melodrama. They want their dish full flavored.

And you are reminded, curiously, of the early days of the movie houses when people responded as easily and enthusiastically; in other words, when the novelty of pictures in motion was in full sway.

We are right now in the full flush of the sound movie novelty. The novelty itself is ruling the roost. But, of course, that appeal won't last forever and very shortly sound movie production will get right down to the rule of quality, just as it did with the silent films.

The next thing to consider is the matter of theatre admission prices. Low prices are the prosperity basis of the picture industry. They must not be raised. There must now, more than ever, remain a clear and wide line of admission price between the speaking stage and the speaking movie. Otherwise there will be trouble. So it will be wisdom itself to watch sound movie production costs and rental prices. The installation cost is only an immediate factor; the rental and synchronization costs are the vital ones.

Then, there's the old bugaboo of the lack of classification of theatres. In the first rush of the feature business every theatre, large or small, big city and neighborhood, competed to book features. It didn't work. People want diversity in theatres. They don't want to find the same entertainment everywhere they turn.

As regards sound movie production cost, there is much experience in movie production to serve as a guide. Will history repeat itself and will there be the same reckless bidding for talent and material? We already hear of large amounts being offered for musical comedy and dramatic shows. How about the development of original stories, scores and songs? The new field is ripe for originality. We review, in this issue, a sound movie act which will appear in this year's "Scandals," and which, we hazard the guess, will be the hit of the show. It indicates the range of clever and appealing stunts the new attraction offers.

Another point may well be mentioned. The illusion of the screen—and illusion is the vital attraction of the show business—has been sadly hurt by telling the wide world just what the tricks of production are and how they are done. About the best thing we can do for the new illusion of the ear is to keep its production processes behind closed doors; and, since there is now a compact organization of film producing forces, that should be fairly well accomplished by an immediate agreement to this effect.

"The Cossacks"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, June 16.—Those who remember Jack Gilbert in "His Hour" are going to applaud his return to the Russia of moviedom in "The Cossacks." This picture affords him a role of pep and dash, and it is a colorful affair, with spectacular high spots that will ring the bell with the public. I rate it one of the best entertainments I have seen this year, and look for it to be a clean-up at the box-office.

The hardy (in the beginning he is a little over-idealistic) Cossack reveler that Gilbert plays in this production is an utterly different figure from the amorous aristocrat that he made famous in the Elinor Glyn opus of several years ago. Jack has progressed since then in his acting. This new portrayal is more decisively a character, while the picture itself is hot with romance—but not love-sick. The idealistic strain at the start is a little less pungent than the rest, but it is fairly conceived in most respects.

In the item that Renee Adoree plays opposite the star, the picture is an echo of "The Big Parade." One wonders why Renee doesn't get more chances to be as good as she is in this feature. She does peasant girls to perfection. As Maryana she displays much of that natural vibrancy that is hers personally. Nils Asther by way of contrast does an effete emissary from the Czar, who attempts to make love to her.

Reinforcing the major principals is Ernest Torrence in the role of Ivan, father of Lukashka (Gilbert). Torrence is always a great actor, though some of his portrayals have been stronger than this. There is a little oversentimentalizing of the father character, but it is relieved by the big swashbuckling moments, notably the one where Torrence, bound and being tortured, defies the inimical Turks to do their worst.

The plot of "The Cossacks" is not too patented. It has, of course, the conventional melodramatic basis, and winds up with a good old race to the rescue. But the familiar hurrah is accented with some fine pathos in a scene enacted by Gilbert over the death of Torrence, as well as many novel, enlivening and dramatic touches elsewhere.

For spectacle there are battle scenes, a little hectic, but interesting. Then there are the feats of horsemanship performed by the real Cossacks. This is great stuff.

The film has atmosphere. It is contributed to by the large number of people who look as if they might be real Russians. They are.

"The Cossacks" stands out from the mass of films this year as a mighty good special. It's pretty much rip-roaring entertainment, thanks to George Hill, who directed most of it, Clarence Brown who wound it up, and Frances Marion who provided the adaptation and the continuity. There are spots where it has been cut rather drastically, and the titles, when I saw it, could stand editing occasionally for their schoolboy name-calling quality. Strangely enough, they were provided by no less capable a playwright than John Colton.

Altogether—a winner.

Midwest Film Golf Contest Brings Out Large Crowd

The Midwest Film Golf Tournament was played on June 15th over the links of the Edgewood Valley Club at La Grange, Ill., and brought out a representative crowd of 70 exchange and exhibitor golfers. There were 34 prizes hung up by the committee in charge. In Class A the low gross went to Abe Steinberg. In Class B Fred Schaefer copped the trophy, shooting the lowest of his class. Low net in Class A was won by Bob Lucas, and in Class B by Oscar Florine. Wm. Burlock was the best Class A player for 18 holes. In the morning Herb Washburn won in Class B for this event.

In the afternoon, Len Ullrich won the Class A 18-hole event. Jack Sampson led the Class B players for 18 holes. Gradwell Sears turned in the day's best net for nine holes in Class A. In Class B, Mr. Baldisair had the best net for nine holes. Eddie Brichetta made the largest score for 36 holes.

Following the day's play on the links, a dinner was served at the club house. The committee in charge of the tournament included Len Ullrich, Clayt Bond, Tommy Greenwood, Jack Sampson and William Burlock.

Blue Law Upheld in Sunday Movie Test Case

The old statute which forbids the operation of opera houses on Sundays, a violation of which resulted in the conviction of John G. Callan, Charles F. Mules and Walter Stierhoff in the Criminal Court in Baltimore recently, has been upheld by the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City. The Bench has decided that a motion picture theatre and an opera house are the same thing. The attorneys in this Sunday movie test have been contending all along that the same classification cannot be applied to the modern motion picture playhouse and the old-style of opera house to which the old ordinance has reference.

A new trial has been allowed on the indictment in which they were charged with selling merchandise on Sunday. A conference, held June 16, by the promoters of the case and the counsel, announced that the case would be taken before the Court of Appeals. John G. Callan is president of the Liberty Defense League and a former member of the Legislature. The test case at which the arrests were made took place several months ago at the Harford Theatre in Baltimore.

FBO Regional Sales Meet Held in N. Y. June 17

A regional sales meeting was held by F B O at the home office in New York last Sunday, June 17, for discussion of the 1928-29 product. J. I. Schnitzer, senior vice-president in charge of distribution, attended the meet which was presided over by Lee Marcus, general sales manager. Edward L. McEvoy, assistant general sales manager, also was in attendance.

Branch managers, salesmen and bookers who attended the gathering included: W. Gardiner, sales manager at Boston; C. F. McGerigle, office manager at Boston; E. F. Haley, C. Denning, H. F. Goldstein, F. Brannan, J. Kennedy, salesmen and J. Downing, booker.

Jerome Safron, Eastern Pa. and Southern N. J. sales manager; J. Schaeffer, S. Rosen, H. W. Tyson, S. Perlsweig, S. Palan, O. B. Derr, salesmen, and J. Phelan, booker at Philadelphia; F. L. McNamee, manager at Washington; R. J. Folliard, G. H. Payne, C. Tyson, salesmen, and J. H. Kelley, booker; J. J. Lane, manager at New Haven; B. Pitkin, H. S. Eskin, salesmen.

Georgia Newspaperman Joins Hays Unit

Leonard Roan, news editor of The Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American, has resigned to become associated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Corporation of America, and goes to Los Angeles, the scene of his new activities.

Mr. Roan's service will be in line of public relations. He is a native Georgian, son of the late Judge L. S. Roan, and has been connected with the Hearst newspapers in Atlanta since 1920, except for a brief association with The Los Angeles Herald.

He is the second member of The Atlanta Georgian's staff to join the Hays organization, being the other.

Amusement Taxes Assailed by Missouri Senator

State Senator A. L. McCawley, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Missouri, in a speech at St. Charles on June 12, condemned taxes on motion picture show admissions and other amusements, cigars, cigarettes, etc.

"No new taxes; no new inspections or fees," is Senator McCawley's slogan.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

THE big possibilities of dialogue on the screen are shown most clearly in "The Lion and the Mouse," which opened at the Warner Theatre, New York, late last week. It is the first real talking picture, because it is the first film in which the dialogue itself is the primary thing.

It shows that the advent of sound on the screen will lead to the creation of a totally new art, which will revolutionize technique, and be neither picture nor stage play, but different from both.

The Warners deserve great credit for their pioneering in the sound field. It was "The Jazz Singer's" amazing success at the box-office which, more than any other one thing, brought the adoption of the sound movie universally throughout the industry. "Tenderloin" and "Glorious Betsy" showed advances in the use of dialogue, and in "The Lion and the Mouse" still further progress has been made.

Especially in the scenes between Lionel Barrymore and Alec Francis does the immense possibility of sound register with the spectator. Barrymore's ease and skill in reading his lines are an indication both of what can be done and must be done by the player in the sound field.

We hear some very interesting things about "Lights of New York," the Warner dialogue and sound-effect picture which is due to come along soon. If advance reports are true, this film will create a sensation.

* * * *

AN indication of what will have to be done with picture technique as a result of the sound movie is shown in "The Lion and the Mouse," where the use of close-ups in talking sequences narrows the screen, so to speak, dispenses with backgrounds for the moment and makes the screen a stage while the characters talk. One of the great advantages of the motion picture has been that it offers a wide canvas with which the stage could not hope to compete. In the sound sequences, this advantage is somewhat lost at present, which indicates with what great care the evolving of technique for sound pictures will have to be handled.

Another striking innovation in picture-making will come about through economy of footage relating to time and space. In other words, as was demonstrated in "Glorious Betsy," one character can tell another of a previous event, making it unnecessary to devote a whole sequence to showing it. In this way, the flash-back may well disappear entirely, or at least be greatly modified. It would seem that dialogue may, in this way, work in the interest of footage economy while it is also aiding dramatic effect.

This does not mean, of course, that sound pictures will be easier to make than the regulation silent ones. On the contrary, still greater care is necessary. The industry is on the road to a new art.

* * * *

THE extent of the revolution which sound is making in the industry is shown in the presentation problem. A year ago, "presentations" were being described as absolutely necessary to the big, first run houses, and, perhaps, in some cases they were. But now, it becomes apparent that, as Motion Picture News contended at the time, the net is the thing that counts; big grosses, of themselves, may not mean prosperity.

The presentation craze is passing, and it will be assisted out by sound. In other words, novelty and specialty acts will be presented on the screen, with talking and singing accompaniment, and this is a healthy thing, not only for reduction of overhead, but in general, because it is well to keep this business the picture business, which it is. Dwarfing the screen with "acts" on the stage was never a good policy, so far as permanence went. There will be less and less of it. The presentation era seems to be nearing its close.

THE announcement that Balaban & Katz have booked the Fox product, in part, for next season is an important development. It is understood that this deal is the forerunner of the booking of Fox pictures by all Publix houses.

A good many factors enter into the situation. One of them is the immediate proposition that Fox threatened to come into the Loop district in Chicago with a big house in opposition to B. & K. Another is that Fox, through control of West Coast and other houses, has a big buying power. There is also the undeniable reason that much of the Fox product is of quality calibre.

More important than all of these, however, is this: it is simply good business to book pictures which the public wants. So the deal is made. It remains to be seen whether or not the Fox forces will adhere to their apparent plan to run their own big theatres mostly with their own product.

If so, it will be an interesting experiment. It has been pretty well established, we think, that a variety of programs and services is necessary to the successful operation of theatre chains. The public, of course, cares not who makes the pictures so long as they are good. And it is the public which will decide this matter.

THE CINEMA, British trade paper, inquires editorially why exhibitions for 'shut-ins' cannot be started on the other side, similar to those provided here.

Says The Cinema:

"More than 170,000 helpless 'shut-ins' in America were entertained at least once a week last year by motion pictures which the industry supplied free of charge. Nearly a thousand institutions for orphans, the aged, the sick, or the imprisoned shared in the fun of pictures. A large number of pictures were shown, of which 12,000 were the feature pictures being currently shown in neighboring theatres. It was a notable piece of charity organization of which the industry may be justifiably proud.

"The obvious reflection arises, what are we doing in a similar direction in this country? We are aware that films are occasionally lent by renters free of charge for exhibition in the name of charity, but the difference is that in America the matter is systematized. The exhibitions are not occasional; they are regular. All these people are treated to pictures at least once a week. It is difficult to estimate the amount of happiness these weekly shows bring to places like prisons, reformatories, and orphanages. It ought not to be difficult to organize similar exhibitions on this side. Renters would, we feel sure, place copies of their product at the disposal of any central office organized to deal systematically with the provision of entertainment to these unhappy 'shut-ins.' The work would be a worthy one, would cost the trade little or nothing, would rebound to the credit of those supporting it, and would doubtless have the benevolent approval of the authorities. Who will start it?"

Trade Restraint Is Denied in Answer to U. S. Suit

Arbitration and Security Deposit Defended in Reply Filed by Distributors, Hays Organization and Film Boards

TWO major contentions are set forth in the answer filed June 20 in the United States District Court in New York City on behalf of ten motion picture producing companies, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and 32 Film Boards of Trade, to a suit filed by the United State government under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, involving arbitration as now practiced in the motion picture industry.

The contentions are:

1. Provision for arbitration in the motion picture industry is made necessary by the delivery of 11,000,000 separate motion picture films under written agreement, annually, in the United States, and by other conditions unique to the business. Among these latter are cited (a) the fact that all films are produced in fulfillment of contracts to lease them, involving a basic element of credit; (b) the producer entrusts to the exhibitor a piece of property with a high and transitory value, again involving credit, and (c) the swiftly diminishing worth of a film after the promotional period makes long-drawn-out litigation unprofitable to the winner as well as to the loser.

2. Arbitration, as now enforced in the motion picture industry, operates, in purpose and effect, solely as a legitimate protection against individuals or corporations who act in bad faith.

"Defendants deny," says the answer, "that they have ever violated, or attempted to violate, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of the United States, and they deny that they have engaged or are now engaged in or intending to or threatening to engage in any conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films." The answer is signed by George W. Wickersham and Edwin P. Grosvenor, of Cadwalader, Wickersham and Taft, solicitors for all the defendants, and by Gabriel L. Hess and Charles C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Film Boards of Trade.

"In the motion picture industry," the respondent motion picture companies say in their answer, "it is essential that controversies be determined quickly, that is to say, within a short time after the controversy arises. Promptness of decision is almost as important as fairness of decision. This fact is recognized throughout the industry. The reason is found in the nature of a motion picture. The rental value of a motion picture is greatest when it is new, that is immediately after its release date or availability for exhibition; as the release date is departed from the rental and exhibition value of the picture rapidly diminish.

Settlement of Disputes

"Delay in the determination of the dispute is costly to distributor and exhibitor alike. Even if the distributor loses the controversy a prompt decision may enable him to relicense the film at a theatre in another place, but if the adverse decision is delayed the distributor loses that possibility because the rental value of a stale picture is negligible. On the other hand, a tardy decision against the exhibitor forces the exhibitor to take and pay for a picture which has no longer any drawing power in his theatre and which will be practically a total loss since the exhibition of an out-of-date picture is likely to impair the reputation of his theatre. If the decision is prompt even though against him the exhibitor may take and exhibit the picture while it still has value and drawing power."

Results of arbitration in the industry today are summarized as follows:

"Under this plan there have been filed and disposed of, during the four calendar years 1924 to 1927, 50,006 cases involving a total sum of $11,200,298.

"In these four years there were only 98 claims in which a seventh arbitrator was required."

After describing the complexity of the motion picture industry and its machinery of distribution, the answer stresses the credit element in the relations between the distributor and the exhibitor.

Credit and Protection

"When a distributor signs a contract with an exhibitor for pictures which are to be delivered in the future," the answer states, "the distributor in fact advances a form of credit to the exhibitor, because after the contract is executed the distributor is precluded from contracting with a neighboring or competing theatre for the same run of the same picture. He is precluded by the contract from doing so. During the life of the contract the distributor agrees to give the exhibitor 'protection' for the period specified in the contract against the exhibition of any of the photoplays named in the contract at theatres in the immediate neighborhood or vicinity of

Conspiracy Charged in Chicago

Injunction Suit Brought by Marks Bros. Against Group of Distributors and Others Goes to Trial This Week

CHICAGO, June 19.—The first hearing of Marks Brothers' bill of complaint asking a temporary injunction against Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation, Balaban & Katz, Orpheum Circuit, Lubliner & Trinz, and twenty-six others, was held before Judge Wilkerson in the District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of Illinois, on Tuesday, and resulted in a partial victory for Marks Brothers.

At this hearing the defendant corporations asked for a period of one month to prepare their case, stating that the bill of complaint covered so many points and extended so far back that it would be impossible for the defendants to answer until their attorneys had communicated with the attorneys of the defendant corporations in New York.

Attorney Tenney, of Tenney, Harding, Sherman & Rogers, and Joseph Rosenberg and Ben Rosenberg, representing Marks Brothers, stated that this is the month for buying pictures and charged that a delay of one month was asked by the defendants in an effort to further monopolize the business of production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States and, in particular, Chicago.

Marks Brothers' legal advisers further alleged that vaudeville acts were being intimidated and persuaded to break their contracts, and that this is causing Marks Brothers considerable hardship. They, therefore, asked that the hearing of this case be made as promptly as possible, being of vital necessity to Marks Brothers.

Judge Wilkerson, thereupon ignored the defendants' request for a delay of one month and gave them two days to make further preparation of their case, and fixed Friday, June 22nd, as the date for further hearing.

The bill of complaint, which was filed by attorneys for Marks Brothers last week, is brought under the Clayton Act, "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes," and federal legislation commonly known as the Sherman Act, "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and asks

M. P. Club Ready Aug. 15

Rapid Progress Made on New Film-men's Quarters at 1560 Broadway; Membership Now Over 200

FINISHING touches are now being made to the new Motion Picture Club located on the sixth floor of the Bond Building, 1560 Broadway, New York City. The building committee, under the chairmanship of Lee Ochs, has been working overtime in order to have the quarters ready for opening August 15. The club's location is in the heart of the film district, and will undoubtedly prove to be a meeting place for many in this industry. A fifteen-year lease has been signed on space amounting to 14,500 square feet.

One of the Club's features will be a well serviced dining room and kitchen. The dining room is on the 46th street side, and is 38 by 68 feet, with a table seating capacity of 240 persons. For banquet purposes, tables can be arranged to seat 400. On one side of the dining room will be a private banquet room or two smaller ones. The larger will seat 70 persons while the smaller will seat thirty each.

To celebrate the event of the membership having mounted to well over 200, the Club will tender to its members a shore dinner in the Colonial Room at the Park Central Hotel June 28. William Brandt, Brooklyn exhibitor, will be in charge of the entertainment.

Paramount to Split Stock Three for One

DIRECTORS of Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, at a meeting held this week, called a special meeting of stockholders of the company for the purpose of increasing the authorized number of shares of the company from 1,000,000 shares of no par value to 3,000,000 shares of no par value.

The Board stated that the purpose of the increase was to split the stock on a three for one basis, which would be done if the increase in authorized shares was approved at the special stockholders' meeting which has been called for August 6th, 1928.

Paramount claims the best year in its history having reported profits available for common stock of $2,264,-148.96 for the first quarter of 1928, which was a new record for any first quarter of the company, and was 17½ per cent more than the profits available for common stock for the corresponding quarter of 1927, the previous record first quarter.

Conspiracy Charged by Marks Brothers

that the defendants, their agents, attorneys and all persons acting in aid or in conjunction with them, be restrained and enjoined pendente lite from commission of any of the illegal acts charged in the bill.

In addition to those named above, the defendant corporations in the bill of complaint include: Publix Theatres Corporation, United Artists Corporation of Illinois, Balaban & Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Pathe Exchanges, Inc., Universal Film Exchange, Inc., Great States Theatres, Inc., Orpheum Circuit Booking Corporation, Western Vaudeville Managers' Association (a corporation), William Morris Theatrical Agency of Chicago, Inc., Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Sam Katz, Barney Balaban, Max Balaban, Dave Balaban, John Balaban, A. J. Balaban, Herbert Stern, Floyd M. Brockwell, United Artists Corporation and Leo Spitz.

Among the allegations made by Marks Brothers, in their bill of complaint, are:

That the defendants in all groups have conspired and confederated together and with other persons, unreasonably to hinder competition and restrain trade in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture films, and to control, dominate and monopolize the motion picture industry, and to injure Marks Brothers in their business.

That defendants did discriminate in price and are now discriminating to do so between the different lessees of motion pictures.

That certain of the defendants would not lease, contract with or in any way deal with Marks Brothers, nor with any other person or corporation not acceptable to the defendant Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation.

That Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation, Publix Theatres Corporation, Balaban & Katz Corporation, Lubliner & Trinz Theatres, Inc., Balaban & Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., and Great States Theatres, Inc., have by contract, license, agreement or secret arrangements, contracted for or cornered all the feature films produced and/or distributed by Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., United Artists, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Pathe Exchanges, Inc., so that none of the films produced by them would be available to the complainants, and further allege that Publix Theatres Corporation and Balaban & Katz Corporation and their subsidiaries have no facilities to and cannot exhibit all of these feature films in first run, Class A, de luxe houses, operated by them, but that said feature films have been cornered for the purpose of securing a monopoly of the motion picture industry in Chicago and of preventing Marks Brothers from securing feature films to exhibit in their theatres.

Marks Brothers also allege violations by defendants, of rules thirteen and fourteen, which were unanimously adopted at the Trade Practice Conference, conducted by Abram F. Meyers, commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission, in New York City, during the week of October 10, 1927.

The bill also charges intimidation of acts, stating that acts playing Marks Brothers' theatres were threatened with black list and also charges causing of acts to break contracts, specifically mentioning the case of Rae Samuels and other headliners.

Intimidation of employees and attacks on employees of Marks Brothers' theatres was also alleged.

exhibitor's theatre. If the exhibitor later repudiates the contract the distributor will not be able to sell the pictures in that vicinity because the competing theatres will be completely booked. Therefore the amount of rental involved in the contract, which represents the entire earning power in that particular neighborhood of all the pictures named in the contract, is a form of credit which the distributor has given the exhibitor and the distributor acts in reliance on that credit.

"The picture is the property of the distributor. The distributor gives possession of this property to the exhibitor for a limited use for which the exhibitor pays a rental. It is a fragile inflammable object easily injured if not carefully handled by the exhibitor. The value of the film (the positive print) is property which, in the ordinary case, the distributor has let the exhibitor take into his possession without having received from the exhibitor any security that he will handle distributor's property carefully and return it in good condition.

"Good Credit" Defined

"The term 'good credit' in the motion picture business as applied to the exhibitor means more than his ability to pay film rentals. An exhibitor may have money in the bank and yet be a bad risk and an undesirable customer. Has he respect for contractual obligations? Will he take, pay for and exhibit, months hence, pictures which

Industry Stabilized, Says Hays

Hollywood Survey Indicates That Production End of Business Gets Dollar for Dollar Value

THE motion picture industry today has the largest number of consumers of any industry in America, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., told members of his Board of Directors in his annual review of the state of the industry, June 20.

Investments in studio properties, stars, picture rights, raw stock, theatres, and good-will as expressed in theatre patronage, make motion pictures unquestionably near the top of America's largest industries, he said.

"Our product now reaches two hundred and fifty million consumers per week," Mr. Hays declared. "Our exchanges handle twenty-five thousand miles of film per day in this country alone. We employ more men and women than Ford and General Motors combined. Investment in the motion picture field now exceeds $2,000,000,000.

"Advance reports from a nationally-known firm of accountants making a survey at Hollywood confirm that the production end of the business gets a dollar in value for every dollar spent. This condition, plus the fact that lawsuits between distributors and exhibitors have been virtually eliminated through arbitration, has stabilized the industry. Financing for legitimate expansion is available steadily at the general market rate for money. Motion picture securities, in relation to those of other industries, have been for many months in a markedly healthy state.

"Our own growth has reached the point where we are of tremendous service to all other business. The interests of other industries are so inter-related with those of the motion picture as to make our objectives identical with theirs. Increasing proof is seen of the recognition of this economic fact both by business leaders and by government officials.

"The most interesting technical development of the year has been the perfecting of talking pictures to a merchandizable point. This will not negative any progress already made, any more than radio abolished newspapers, phonographs ended symphony concerts, or automobiles wiped out railroads. This industry will use this new contribution of science without disturbance to further promote its forward stride. It welcomes these new aids in the pioneer spirit which has marked our vigorous span of life."

The entire world today, Mr. Hays said, is in the market for motion pictures, adding that American pictures are used in large numbers abroad by "foreign invitation."

"Ours is not a foreign invasion at all," Mr. Hays declared. "Our pictures go abroad by invitation. The people of the world want them, despite the activities of foreign governments to lessen the effectiveness of the American film industry by practically subsidizing indigenous film production. However, by revealing the need for our films abroad, and by proving our sincerity in exhibiting worthwhile foreign productions here, amicable adjustments are being effected in foreign countries, which will lead to happier business relations in all European countries."

The industry, Mr. Hays continued, was never more ready for new developments nor in as good shape in the way of personnel and resources as it is today.

"For several years the industry has been trying to employ only those directors, writers, and actors who have ability to make always the best pictures," Mr. Hays said. "Since acting, writing, and directing for the screen are unique to this business, with a technique of their own, it has been necessary to develop men and women to fulfill these duties. By creating our own creative artists, we have built up a considerable body of men, trained workers, who think in terms of the motion picture art. Their effort is being felt daily in the product which is coming from the studios and their number is constantly increasing.

"This search for new talent is a continuous one. New faces, new writers, are constantly being given an opportunity to find favor with the public which first, last,

Bankers and Picture Industry

Wall Street Sees Decision Not Yet Made as to Whether Kennedy Group Will Be Merged or Remain Affiliated

FOLLOWING announcement last week of the appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as advisor to First National, with control now vested in Stanley and a group of franchise holders, interest continues in the ultimate working out of "the Kennedy group" of film companies and theatre interests.

According to The Wall Street Journal, "bankers are working on the formation of a fourth large moving picture combination. It probably will be formed out of the group of independent companies which include Stanley Co., First National Pictures, Pathe Exchange, Keith-Albee-Orpheum, Inc., Film Booking Offices, known as FBO, headed by Joseph Kennedy, and Warner Bros. Pictures. Universal Pictures is a possibility.

"Bankers are progressing slowly, however, and it is not yet entirely clear what benefits would come from the formation of an actual combination that cannot be obtained simply by an affiliation of interests."

It was reported this week from the Coast that William Le Baron will become production advisor to First National and Pathe. Watterson R. Rothacker has resigned as head of the First National studio, and it is believed that Cecil B. De Mille will join United Artists, the report being that he is to direct "The Darling of the Gods" for that concern.

Mr. Kennedy is now making an intensive study of the First National situation, and is drafting a report to its board of directors, which will meet in about two weeks. At that time decision may be made whether to combine First National and Pathe distribution or to merge these two companies with FBO.

The Wall Street Journal article said in part:

"Recent changes in the banking control of several of these companies have been important steps toward a consolidation. The first was the purchase of E. F. Albee's holdings in Keith-Albee-Orpheum by Joseph Kennedy for a banking group composed of the Chase National Bank, Blair & Co., and Jeremiah Milbank. This places Keith, FBO and Pathe Exchange in the hands of the same interests.

"The second change was the acquisition by Goldman, Sachs & Co., bankers for Warner Bros., of a substantial interest in Stanley Company of America, which has a

Court Rules State Admission Tax Is Unconstitutional

THROWING out of court the case of the Tax Commission against A. H. Yeomans, proprietor of the Rex Theatre, Sumpter, S. C., Magistrate M. J. Moore ruled that State tax on admissions was confiscatory and therefore unconstitutional. Alleged failure to properly tear an admission ticket, a part to the patron and the other to be discarded, was the cause for the action.

The counsel for the defense moved, soon after the opening of the trial, that the case be dismissed upon confiscatory grounds. The court was in agreement and the jury was instructed to return a favorable verdict for Mr. Yeomans.

Buying Strike Continues in Cleveland

Business Manager of Cleveland Body Urges Holding Out for 50% Cut Next Season

THE Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association is continuing its buying strike to a reduction in film rentals next season. George W. Erdman, business manager of the association, in a long statement to members of the body urges that they seek a fifty per cent cut. Mr. Erdman's statement reads as follows:

"Real important facts about the 1928-29 buying season.

"For your information please let me inform you that the protection committee is working on the matter of reducing the protection that is afforded the first-run theatres.

"Let us analyze the 1927-28 season.

"Did you make any money? Of course not.

"One reason is because you paid too much for your film.

"The pictures released during the past season were not up to the standard.

"You were 'jockeyed' into buying the entire product at one time from most distributors, especially one exchange which formerly sold you their product in 'Spring' and 'Fall' block in the past. When they sold twice a year your 'Spring' block cost you a lot less, you paid no more for the 'Fall' block and your average was a lot less than your average for the 1927-28 season.

"Prove this to yourself, look up what your film service cost you in May, 1928. Then compare this with what you paid for service in the month of May of any other year prior to 1928.

"Now compare your gross receipts of May, 1928, to that of May in former years. You'll be surprised.

"This information was gathered by talking to many leading exhibitors in Cleveland and elsewhere who know what they are talking about.

"After checking up with several exhibitors who play first run in their zones, to my amazement I find that they have many pictures to play in June and July at prices three times the cost they paid during the 'Fall' and 'Spring' season. They will not take in the cost of the picture, say nothing of the overhead.

"With your gross receipts away below normal and your film rentals higher than the new Depot Tower, how can you make money? Personally, I can't see how you can stay in business.

"We know and so does the distributor, that the coming season is going to be a long siege of tough sledding.

"Do you realize that this is a Presidential election year?

"You bet you do and so do the bankers in Wall Street who are behind the producers, then don't let the managers or salesmen tell you that business is going to be better this fall.

"Chances are it will be worse before it will be better.

"Therefore, if you do not protect yourself, don't expect the exchanges to.

"Demand at least a 50 per cent cut in your film service and then you will not be any too happy or are you 'demanding' more than you are entitled to? Remember at least a 50 per cent cut.

"Using an ad from one of the new press sheets:—

"This is an exhibitors' year.

"Please remember this, if you don't demand and get a 50 per cent cut in film rentals, it will be a 'Producer's Year.'

"Which would you rather have? It's up to you. Take your choice. A 50 per cent or close your theatre.

"Do not buy now as you agreed to back up your Protection Committee.

"Suppose the protection matter was settled (but it is not) and you bought now and the first-run theatres open their season, say on Labor Day, these very same pictures would not be available to you much before October 25th, over four months from now.

"So do not even talk about buying.

"By backing up your Protection Committee, you no doubt will have an opportunity of reading up and getting criticisms on the new product from the pre-releases. This surely will help you a lot in your selection and you will be in a better position to get what you are justly entitled to:

"A 50 per cent reduction in your next season's film rentals.

"Stop! Stop! Stop! ! !

"Again, stop digging into your pocket and paying your money to the distributors for the privilege of keeping open your theatre and going broke."

Trade Restraint Denied in Suit Answer

he contracts today to take and pay for when they are released months hence? Will he handle carefully and protect from injury the valuable and fragile property of the distributor while it is entrusted to his care? Will he show the picture only at the theatre specified in the contract or is he likely to 'bicycle' the picture secretly to a second theatre and exhibit it there without accounting to the distributor for the stolen use of his property? Will he return the picture promptly to the distributor, meaning immediately after the exhibition, in order that the distributor may deliver it to the exhibitor having the next right of exhibition? Will he account honestly to the distributor where the contract calls for payment of a percentage of the gross receipts? The answer to these, and other questions, relating to the use of the distributor's property and the performance of his contractual obligations determine whether the exhibitor is a good risk or his credit is bad. These are more important to the distributor than the size of the exhibitor's bank account, for they determine the character of the exhibitor. Upon them depends a substantial percentage of the distributor's total revenue."

This credit phase of the industry, until the first experimental arbitration contract was introduced in 1922, resulted, according to the answer, in the necessity for the distributor to require from the exhibitor substantial advance of money when rental contracts were made. At the time arbitration first came into the industry, the answer says, $5,000,000 of exhibitors' in the form of advanced deposits was held every season, mostly in New York. The abolishment of this advance deposit is cited as one of the benefits of arbitration.

Security Deposit Defended

The answer to the Government's suit stresses the fact that the obligation of the exhibitor in the event that he refuses to arbitrate his contract is not a burdensome or harsh one. The use of an arbitration clause by all distributors does not restrain trade, it is declared. The rule is that the exhibitor, if he refuses to arbitrate or refuses to abide by an arbitration award, shall be required to deposit as security for the performance of his existing contracts a sum which does not exceed the rental price of one picture, but never larger than $500, until such time as he shall have complied with his arbitration agreement. Whenever he shall have so complied, or whenever he shall have deposited this security, the distributor in question is required under the contract to immediately renew film service to the exhibitor.

"The purpose of defendant distributors," says the answer, "in agreeing upon adopting and observing the rule that when an exhibitor has refused to comply with an arbitration award each distributor having a contract with such exhibitor shall demand security for the performance of its contract with such exhibitor was and is to obtain reasonable protection for the distributors in dealing with financially irresponsible or unscrupulous exhibitors. An exhibitor who fails to comply with an arbitration award does so either because he is financially irresponsible or for the reason that he prefers to harass the distributor by litigation. If the exhibitor has not the means to pay an arbitration award which has been based upon a breach of contract, distributors having contracts with such exhibitor are entitled to ask for and receive reasonable protection in respect of the credit which they have advanced before they are required to make further deliveries of pictures to him.

"No Coercive Effect"

"The amount of security demanded of the exhibitor in such event being reasonable in amount and limited to the particular need of the distributor as stated in the rules, the demand can have no coercive effect upon the exhibitor. If the exhibitor has the financial capacity to pay for the pictures which he has contracted to exhibit he will have no difficulty in complying with the demand to make a cash deposit, which averages less than the rentals for the pictures. If he has not financial capacity he will nevertheless continue to get credit and pictures provided only that he complies with the arbitration award. The security of cash deposit gives the distributor nothing more than reasonable protection in respect of the credit, as described in this answer, which the distributor advances the exhibitor in the ordinary course of business.

"The agreement between the distributors does not go beyond the reasonable requirements made necessary by the conditions of the industry.

"No exhibitor, except one looking for an unfair or dishonest advantage, has cause to object to the rules for the enforcement of decisions of the Boards of Arbitration hereinabove described."

Columbia Wins Case Against Exchange

THE right of a corporation to use its own name and corporate title was threshed out in the Equity Court of Western Pennsylvania recently when a suit brought against Columbia Pictures Corporation by Columbia Film Service, a local film exchange of Pittsburgh, Pa., was decided in favor of the former.

The suit was instituted by the film exchange to prevent Columbia Pictures Corp. from using the name Columbia on their own Pittsburgh establishment, charging that it was unfair competition and worked injury upon the Columbia Film Service.

It was decided by the Court that, inasmuch as Columbia Pictures Corp. were nationally known as producers of Columbia pictures; that the name Columbia identified a particular product, created by large expenditures of money, that Columbia Pictures Corp. were entitled to do business under their own name for reasons stated. The bill in Equity was dismissed with costs against Columbia Film Service.

Paul Burger Made Aide to Al Lichtman

Paul Burger, who has resigned from the M-G-M sales staff after eight years of service, has been appointed an assistant to Al Lichtman, sales head of United Artists, and already begun his new duties. He will specialize in organization work and will cooperate with Cresson E. Smith, assistant to the general manager of distribution.

Mr. Burger has worked successively on the staffs of The New York Globe, The New York American, The New York Sun and Harper's Weekly in business and editorial departments. When Felix Feist created a M-G-M sales development department, he placed Mr. Burger in charge. No change in the present personnel of the United Artists sales staff is to come out of the appointment of Mr. Burger, Mr. Lichtman states.

Richmount Distributors for Chesterfield

As a result of contracts entered into last week between Chesterfield Motion Picture Corporation, George R. Batcheller, president, and Richmount Pictures, Inc., David J. Mountan, president, the world's distribution rights to Chesterfield pictures are now controlled by Richmount. These rights are exclusive of United States and Canada and take in the complete Chesterfield product for the season of 1928-29.

Starting with September 1, Chesterfield will deliver a picture every seven weeks, it is said.

Columbia Casts Leads for "Say It With Sables

Francis X. Bushman and Helene Chadwick have been signed to head the cast of "Say It With Sables," which Columbia is putting into production as next to last of its 1927-1928 program. Frank Capra wields the megaphone.

A supporting trio, Margaret Livingston, Arthur Rankin and Alphonse Ethier, has also been cast.

Param't News Claims Scoop Over Press

PARAMOUNT News claims a scoop over the daily press in getting a news story to the public. In less than ten minutes after Hoover had been nominated, Paramount News had word of the event flashed on the screens of several California theatres by means of a previously prepared reel of the Presidential candidate, which was held until released by telephone. This, it is declared by Paramount News, is the first time that a newsreel has scooped the newspapers.

A beat was secured on the coast by the newsreel with convention pictures by the use of several fast planes. At the same time the east had been taken care of by means of the fast laboratory plane which flew from Kansas City to New York, developing and printing the films and stills enroute.

Paramount News sent a special release announcing the nomination of Hoover on the afternoon of June 14 to San Francisco exchanges with instructions to hold them until released by telephone. A few seconds after the nomination, these specials were released, beating, it is said, the newspapers by about one-half hour.

Tiffany-Stahl Busy on Production Schedule

The Tiffany-Stahl studio forces are finishing production on the 1927-28 schedule and starting the 1928-29 specials and star vehicles.

George Jessel is now working in the title role of "George Washington Cohen." Eve Southern and H. B. Warner are now playing the leads in "The Naughty Duchess." Olive Borden is just completing "The Albany Night Boat."

Crosland to Direct "Scarlet Woman" for Columbia

"The Scarlet Woman," Lya De Putti's initial vehicle under the Columbia banner, will also mark Alan Crosland's first direction for this company. The picture, one of the ten specials on the Columbia program, is a story of Russian life by Bess Meredyth. The production is now ready for shooting.

Universal's Florida Houses Reported Taken Over by E. J. Sparks

IT is reported, from sources considered reliable, that E. J. Sparks, prominent Florida chain theatre operator, has concluded a deal with Universal by which he will take over the latter's Florida theatres, with the exception of houses at Leesburg and Lake City where Earl Fain is a 50 per cent partner, and the Capitol at Miami which Universal owns jointly with Wolfson and Meyers. The group reported taken over is the original Sparks circuit and includes holdings in Orlando, Plant City, Deland, St. Augustine, Bradentown, Sarasota, Arcadia, Kissimee and Fort Myers.

Confirmation is lacking from either party but such indications as Mr. Spark's order to Vitaphone for equipment to be installed in the Arcade at Fort Myers, no successor named to fill the post of Universal's Southern division manager, resigned several weeks ago by Willard C. Patterson, and the well known fact that Mr. Sparks has been in New York in conference with Universal officials, all point to a consummation of the deal.

It is also possible, if the deal has gone through that, on account of Mr. Sparks affiliations with Publix and Saenger, the Universal holdings will eventually be joined to the Publix-Saenger chain. This would mean that Universal's holdings in this territory would be reduced to a minimum, leaving only the Capitol in Atlanta and a group of houses in the suburban Atlanta district.

FBO Plans $30,000,000 Production Budget

Corporation Announces Expenditure for Next 3 Years; Kennedy, Schnitzer and Le Baron End Conferences

A PRODUCTION budget of $30,000,000 for the next three years is the plan of F B O Pictures Corporation, now entering the third year of its existence under the leadership of Joseph P. Kennedy.

Production plans have been in progress for the last six weeks at the F B O home office. The primary figures in the conferences have been Mr. Kennedy, J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president in charge of distribution, and William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production. After participating in the apportioning of the budget, Mr. Le Baron left New York last Sunday for the F B O studio on the coast.

There he will proceed with the program of expansion which he began before his departure for New York. Among the megaphone talent assembled by him at the F B O studio are Marshall Neilan, Ralph Ince, George B. Seitz, Robert Vignola, George Melford, Lynn Shores, Bert Glennon, Jerome Storm, Louis King, Robert North Bradbury and Robert De Lacy.

In addition to this array of "names," F B O points to its acquisition of Tom Mix as a sign of its progressiveness. With the completion of his vaudeville tour in K-A-O houses, Mix is credited with having broken new high grosses in the various houses he visited.

Furthering its expansion in all departments is the recent establishment of a short subject sales department at the F B O home office. This department will concentrate on the four series of short subjects being produced by Larry Darmour for Standard Cinema Corporation and the 26 one-reel Curiosities.

M-G-M Buys Rights to "Trader Horn"

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER has puchased the screen rights to "Trader Horn," the best-seller in the non-fiction field during the past year.

The acquisition of this book by Alfred Aloysious Horn and Ehteldra Lewis, gives M-G-M the rights to the two most popular publications of the year as "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," leader in the fictional class, was recently obtanied by this company.

"Trader Horn" has gone through fifteen editions since its publication by Simon and Schuster a year ago.

Bankers and the Motion Picture Industry chain of theatres in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Stanley Company is the largest holder of stock in First National Pictures Corporation with the exception of Fox Film Corporation, which is understood to have been seeking control.

"Change in the banking management of Stanley immediately was followed by an agreement with other theatre chains, which were large First National stockholders, to pool their interests with Stanley, thus giving Stanley a working control of that film producing company. Irving D. Rossheim, president of Stanley Company, has been elected president of First National Pictures, and a contract has been made with Joseph Kennedy, who will act as special advisor to the management.

"Thus there are two well defined groups —Pathe, Keith and FBO, and Stanley, First National and Warner—both of which will be under the supervision of Joseph Kennedy. This indicates at least a working agreement among the companies involved, and should in time lead to combinations.

"Bankers are progressing slowly, however, and it is not yet entirely clear what benefits would come from the formation of an actual combination that cannot be obtained simply by an affiliation of interests.

"Another affiliation seems to be urgently needed in the moving picture field under an aggressive management that might be able to restore the declining earning power of several independent companies which have had hard sledding in the past year or so.

"Competition in the industry has been growing keener, and film companies without large theatrical connections, and theatre chains without film producing affiliations, have been meeting with difficulties. The many new theatres recently built have taken business away from smaller and older houses.

"The three leaders in the field—Paramount, Loew and Fox—with well rounded and highly organized production departments and extensive chains of theatres, started to meet the situation three or four years ago, and are now in a strong position where earnings probably will be comparatively stable. The independent companies, however, are still in the process of solving their problems."

Industry Stabilized, Says Will Hays

and all the time, measures the success or failure of our efforts.

"The public has been quick to reward the industry for its continuous supply of good entertainment at a price within the means of all," Mr. Hays declared. "It has been particularly quick to reward the voluntary decision of the producers to avoid unpalatable themes in a day when there is a tendency to kick over the traces of good taste and the conventions. There has been such a decided improvement in the artistic and other qualities of the product that twenty-eight organized groups since the first of January this year reviewing pictures have made recommendations and endorsements of 647 pictures."

There is still a great, new audience to be reached by motion pictures, Mr. Hays declared. By continuing to produce the very best possible photoplays, and by preserving an artistic ideal, vast new possibilities, with added revenues, will be realized.

Van Beuren Enterprises Acquire Sportlights

THE Grantland Rice Sportlights are announced by Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the Van Beuren Enterprises, as the latest release under the Van Beuren banner. According to present arrangements, the first Sportlights negative to be handled by Van Beuren will be delivered to the Van Beuren office on June 20, and subsequently will be released on Monday, August 13.

Production of Sportlights will continue under the supervision of Grantland Rice and John L. Hawkinson. The distribution by Pathe will be as in the past.

The Voice of the Screen

News and Comment on All Phases of "Sound" Pictures

Talkie Highlights

AL WOODS, veteran Broadway producer, in interview, predicts big times ahead for the legitimate producer on Broadway in sound pictures. He offers many suggestions.

A sound picture, for the first time, is included in the new production of George White's Scandals, which opens in Atlantic City this week. It is the work of John W. Noble, supervising director of Vocafilm.

Strand Theatre in New York, for the first time shows and entire "talking picture" program. All other acts are elminated.

M-G-M Movietone News is promised for early presentation on the screen.

St. Louis musicians aroused over conditions presented by "canned music" make appeal over radio for support of the union men.

Frank Gillmore, executive secretary of Actors Equity Association, in his annual report to that body expresses the belief that the most prosperous times are ahead for legitimate actors because of sound pictures.

The romantic history of Vitaphone is revealed in the second installment of an article, which tells of the improvements made from time to time.

Salt Lake house profits handsomely by running excursions from nearby towns for the first showing of Vitaphone.

Al Woods Sees Legitimate Producer on Top

Declares Picture Companies Will Have to Pay Generous Percentages to Acquire Stage Hits

THE producer of the legitimate stage is at last coming into his own in the motion picture industry with the real advent of sound pictures, according to Al Woods, among the leading Broadway producers, and one who is credited with a large number of successes.

Mr. Woods makes no bones of the fact that his successful plays, if reproduced on the screen, are going to cost the motion picture producer real money in the form of a generous percentage of the box-office intake. So far as he is concerned there will no longer be a set sum for the picture rights to a legitimate stage success.

After Stage Hits

That the leading motion picture producers are bending every effort to secure the Broadway stage hits for reproduction in sound films, is revealed by Mr. Woods, who says:

"They are after a number of my shows and I am near closing with them on three of them. Joseph P. Kennedy is negotiating with me for "The Trial of Mary Dugan," a play that is selling out everywhere in this country, as well as in England and France. No company can have it except at my terms, and it will be worth to them whatever I charge them. Other producers are after it too. They offer you $175,000 for a show like that. Nothing doing, I want my percentage, or none of them will get it."

Among others of the Woods plays that are wanted for screen reproduction with sound, he revealed, are: "The Shanghai Gesture," "Crime," "The Green Hat," "Stolen Fruit" and "High Stakes."

Another stipulation he makes is that his stars should be seen in the leading roles of such plays as "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and "The Shanghai Gesture."

"Who could they get to do 'Mary Dugan' better than Rex Cherryman and Ann Harding?", Mr. Woods asks. "The play has made them both on Broadway, and they would be just as big in the picture version."

Not only does Mr. Woods figure the legitimate producer will profit by the reproduction of his successful plays on the screen, but he foresees a very close alliance between the entire speaking stage and the screen. This alliance, he thinks, must come if the sound pictures are to attain the success which he feels they can if properly produced. The average picture producer knows little of stage technique, which now becomes all-important in pictures, he argues, and the legitimate producer knows little of picture technique. If they get together they will have something.

"It is a shame," says Mr. Woods, "to produce talking pictures with people who are not qualified to read lines. Here they are trying to introduce something new and they are presenting it at a great disadvantage when they do not have qualified actors and actresses to read the lines.

"It is not the picture that is new, it is the sound. The fact that a player does not screen well makes little difference. The audience wants to hear how voices sound, so why not give them the best you have in voices? The best must come from the legitimate stage, where they are trained for just what is now wanted in pictures.

"It is not necessary to discard those film stars whose voices do not register well on the sound reproducing devices. They are too big an asset to pictures for that. But they need training. They should not be used in sound pictures until they know how to read lines. That is something that can easily be acquired. That girl who just went out of my office is going to star for me on the stage next season. She came to me a while ago and said she wanted to go on the stage. She had had no previous experience and didn't know how to read a line. I sent her to a woman instructor and I am satisfied now that she can get away with a starring role next season. Almost any screen player can learn voice control and how to read lines in ten lessons. They should never be heard in a picture until they have had that training. The public will lose interest in talking pictures unless the lines are well read.

Tremendous Possibilities

"It's hard to figure what this thing is all about yet, but it certainly has tremendous possibilities. The picture industry certainly needs the legitimate producer to inject the proper showmanship angles in the talkie game. For one thing they are going to make a great mistake if they produce some of those old shows without bringing the dialogue and situations up to date.

"You know what the picture industry needs right now. They need some of the foremost writers to take those old scripts and rewrite them right up to the minute.

Sound Pictures and Production Plans

Producers Awaiting Further Details on Synchronization Idea

HOLLYWOOD, June 17.—Picture production in Hollywood is very apt to be late this season because of the uncertainty surrounding the more or less sudden impetus given talking movies. Nobody seems to be entirely clear as to just what is what in connection with the talkies. One hears so many different tales that it is difficult to fathom what it is all about.

Many of the important companies are holding up production on their forthcoming special features until the details for sound synchronization are perfected. As soon as equipment and studios have been completed these will go into production. Meantime all but the largest companies are giving pause to this phase of the industry. It is an expensive item to equip a studio for sound and there are many who are not yet convinced that the time is ripe to install such equipment.

The film capital of the world, however, is wakening suddenly from a lethargy which has enfolded for the past several months. There is no doubt of the enthusiasm over sound pictures but not enough details of such production have yet been forthcoming. Practically all of the producers are tied up with some form of sight and sound synchronization and the studios are looking forward to one of their biggest seasons, but they don't know yet what developments may be forthcoming in the immediate future.

The players are even more excited over the sound pictures, if possible, than the producers. Many of those who have attained stardom or near stardom are inclined to be panicky for fear that they cannot get over with the same success when they are called upon to read lines.

As a result of this condition and anticipating a demand for players who have trained voices, schools of education are springing up all over Hollywood. No less than ten such schools are now being advertised in the Los Angeles newspapers with dozens of private studios and teachers taking screen players under their tutelage to train them for work in Vitaphone or other talking productions.

Alabama Inaugurates Sound Pictures

THE Alabama Theater, de luxe Publix house in Birmingham, inaugurated Vitaphone this week, thus being the second de luxe house in the city to offer the "spoken drama," following the Strand which so successfully launched both Vitaphone and Movietone recently.

The policy of the Strand will not be disturbed and the house will continue to present Vitaphone and Movietone attractions, while the Alabama will have the privilege of playing sound pictures occasionally.

"Tenderloin" was the feature picture for the debut of Vitaphone at the Alabama with which the Publix stage show, "Highlights," shared honors.

Paramount's Major Sound Picture Production on West Coast

PARAMOUNT'S major producing activities, both in synchronized and silent pictures, will be conducted at the company's studio in Hollywood, it was announced recently by Adolph Zukor. Explaining the reopening of the Long Island studio Mr. Zukor said:

"We are reopening the Long Island studio and are equipping it for production of sound pictures because certain types of stories can best be made here in the East on account of the availability of a particular type of talent. It also will be easier to make synchronized productions of stage unit shows in the Long Island studio. The regular Paramount schedule of production, however, will be synchronized with sound in our West Coast studio and in the future, as in the past, our major activities will be conducted in Hollywood, both in sound and in silent pictures."

One firm has already opened a studio to make voice tests on phonograph records which can be submitted to producers by actors seeking roles. The charge for a test is $85 for one side of a record or $150 for both sides.

The universities and colleges of California have awakened also to the growing demand for trained voices and are to institute courses of instruction to fit actors, writers, directors and technicians for careers in the talking pictures.

A large central recording plant is planned for Hollywood to take care of the unprecedented business that will follow the inauguration of the new invention.

Edward J. Montagne, scenario editor-in-chief of Universal, is completing an exhaustive study of the various talking devices as the preliminary step for the introduction of one of them at the Carl Laemmle Studios, with the consequent change in the preparation of scripts for the particular productions. Montagne is inclined to believe that the day of the dialogue picture has arrived to stay and that changed conditions in scenario preparation must inevitably follow. Montagne declares, however, that the changes otherwise inevitable will not effect the status of the writer and that scripts will remain much the same, for a while at least.

"The scenarist of today is too clever to be dispensed with," said Montagne. "He has merely to adapt himself to new conditions. Many of our best scenarists can write very fine dialogue, and not infrequently, a goodly share of the titles which writers conceive in their scripts are used in the picture. Most writers should welcome this change, because talking pictures will give them greater opportunities for getting on the screen much that was impossible under the old conditions."

M-G-M Movietone News Will Be Presented in Near Future

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER is preparing for early presentation of Movietone News, according to an announcement by Nicholas M. Schenck, who declares that Movietone subjects will be done with discrimination and only when sufficiently effective. Mr. Schenck warns producers against the indiscriminate use of sound to avert a disappointed public.

With regard to M-G-M Movietone News and the manner of the handling of sound films by the company, the President of M-G-M said:

"This particular phase of our activity is already well along in its development, and the public may look for the finest of sound subjects recorded with expert perfection.

"The M-G-M News is produced for our company by the William Randolph Hearst organization, the largest individually controlled news agency in the world. The addition of Movietone subjects will be done with discrimination, and no effort nor expense will be spared to achieve the best results. The Capitol Theatre orchestra will provide the scores and musical accompaniment for the M-G-M Movietone News.

"The M-G-M Movietone, as recently announced, through contracts with Western Electric, will be incorporated in many of the feature pictures produced at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios. We also will have M-G-M Movietone to embellish the Hal Roach Comedies and our other short features, the M-G-M Great Events in Technicolor, and the M-G-M Ufa Oddities.

"In making this announcement I do not wish to give the impression that we are rushing into Movietone production. For the past year we have given careful consideration to the possibilities of this new invention and have been making preparations for using it.

"We must bear in mind that the success of this new device ultimately will not be based on its novelty. Tricks soon get old. Sound effects and language only will be used by us when silence and mere pantomime will not be sufficiently effective.

"If producers do not use this new medium with intelligence, the public is likely to be disappointed. If theatres are encouraged to provide Movietone equipment, they must not be discouraged by the productions furnished them. That is our responsibility.

Woods Sees Legitimate Producer on Top

It's silly to try to put some of that old dialogue and some of those situations over on an audience. Many of those old impossible scenes can be eliminated and new ones put in that would better suit picture purposes.

"As a matter of fact I think it would be better if most of these pictures were built on the highlights of a legitimate production without the continuous dialogue. Dialogue should be used only as a contrast, to break the monotony of continuous silence and to more forcibly drive home a climax.

"I have a play I am going to produce next season called 'The Legacy' that would make a corking picture. Florence Reed is to star in it. You know what I would like to do with a play like that. I would like to open it in the key cities one week and after it has run a week follow right in the same towns with the picture version and sound accompaniment. I think such a move would help both productions.

"Here's an idea, which I think a good one; why doesn't some one of these picture producers take a theatre like the Eltinge, put a production manager in and let him produce plays to run a month? If the play is a hit move it out to another theatre at the end of the month and put another one on. In this way they might have twelve plays at their disposal in a year with a company for each well qualified to play it on the screen just as they present it on the stage. There would be no need then for long rehearsals. There would be no chance to lose money. If the play was not worthy of screen production you could easily get the production costs out of releases to stock companies after a month's run on Broadway."

Asked if he would permit his stars, such as Rex Cherryman, Ann Harding, Florence Reed and Lowell Sherman, while under contract to him, to appear in talking pictures, Mr. Woods replied that he would only if they played in his stage successes. He has a pride in his plays and he would like to see them made with his own talent; also he would oppose their appearing in outside pictures.

Vitaphone Trailers Now Standard Accessories

Vitaphone trailers with which Warner Bros. experimented when they released "The Jazz Singer," "Glorious Betsy," "Tenderloin" and "The Lion and the Mouse," have now been adopted as a standard accessory on all Warner pictures, according to an announcement from Sam E. Morris, General Manager of Distribution.

Sound Construction Work Starts at M-G-M

Work on the construction of the big "control stage," first unit in an elaborate stage installation for the making of "talking pictures" commenced last week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, when, as wreckers cleared the old stage on the site, foundations were laid out for the new structure.

Salt Lake House Runs Excursions for Sound Showings

"TENDERLOIN" was held over for an added week at the Victory Theatre in Salt Lake City, due to the tremendous records having been made by this performance in addition to the Vitaphone and Movietone performances.

Very good exploitation was used in connection with the showing here of "The Jazz Singer," which broke all previous records at the Victory, a good deal of credit being due to Manager Ray Hendry and his Assistant Manager Baughman.

Special low rate excursions to Salt Lake and return via the Orem Electric Lines as far south as Payson, Utah., were obtained as an exploitation stunt at the Victory during this presentation last week.

Sound Picture Sketch Is Included in "Scandals"

John W. Noble Produces Vocafilm Gem for Geo. White; First of Kind in Broadway Review

FOR the first time since the advent of sound pictures, a big Broadway review will include them in the immediate future. In fact, this is already a reality in connection with George White's Scandals, which opened at Atlantic City Thursday night of this week and which will have its Broadway opening soon.

As one of the features of this big review there is a skit almost entirely in sight and sound pictures and it is one of the cleverest of the many that have already been displayed. In fact, it is developed along lines that have heretofore been displayed and may be taken as an example of what the showmanship of a producer of the legitimate theatre may do in the development of sight and sound pictures.

This is an act which combines the "talkie" and dialogue from a stage box. It was done by arrangement between George White and the Vocafilm Company, Vocafilm equipment being used to splendid advantage.

Harry Richman, Willie Howard and Georgie White are the principals in this skit, which opens with Richman singing a number on the screen. He is given the razz by Willie Howard from the stage box. Richman orders the music stopped, while from the screen he pleads with Howard in the box not to interrupt him. The song is resumed and again Howard interrupts. Richman then challenges him to come down on the screen and sing the song better.

Howard leaves the stage box and is next seen entering a rear door on the screen. He advances alongside of Richman and goes into the song. His effort is followed by a quarrel which brings White on the screen in the role of peacemaker. It ends happily for all but White. He tells Howard and Richman that they do not appreciate what he has done for them, that in his will he has even provided an apartment house for one and a theatre for the other. White exits through the rear door, through which he is immediately shot to death by Howard and Richman, who then become the immediate possessors of an apartment house and a theatre.

What lends more interest to the skit is the fact that the principals are all seen through the review. Their voices on the screen are quite a test for Vocafilm, which comes through with flying colors.

John W. Noble, production supervisor for Vocafilm, is the man principally responsible for the making of this Scandals skit. For many months past at Vocafilm Mr. Noble has been studying the problem and that of story construction for sound pictures, and he is not just sure yet what that construction should be. He collaborated with George White on the production of this sketch and between them they conceived and executed a gem. As Al Woods says, "this one is not good; it's wonderful!"

Whether these shorts should be made in straight tabloid form, whether they should be made along the lines of a review or whether they should have just a straight continuity are among the problems that are now being given much consideration by Mr. Noble.

Mr. Noble is a rare combination for this sound motion picture enterprise. First of all, he is an engineer. Second, he has had some fourteen or fifteen years of experience as a director of motion pictures, and, on top of that, has directed for legitimate stock, musical comedy and vaudeville. In order of their importance Mr. Noble considers the engineer first. He declares a man must have engineering experience to get the full value of sound into pictures. He considers that stock and vaudeville direction are next essential qualifications for second picture direction, and, of course, one must have a complete knowledge of motion picture direction to be successful.

"What is needed most in the motion picture studio now," said Mr. Noble, "is a supervisorial director, who first of all is an engineer. It is more important that he has some knowledge of engineering than picture direction. He can surround himself with a good picture director and a good stage director. That would make the ideal combination.

The Romantic History of Vitaphone

Many Improvements Made Before Initial Showing on Broadway

WHEN the curtain was first run up at the Warner Theatre in New York on the night of August 7, 1926, there were few in the capacity audience who placed any credence on this new "talking picture" device. In fact, there were none but the Warner Brothers and a handful of their intimates who realized fully what this was going to mean to the motion picture industry. The Warners knew, because they had gone through plenty of grief in attaining perfection for the device. They had expended stupendous sums on minor improvements here and there, which in the aggregate developed a crude apparatus, which was first shown them by the salesmen of the Western Electric Company, into a perfect-recording and sound-reproducing machine.

Five minutes after that initial curtain the consensus of opinion of the audience was that the Warners "had something." In fact, they knew it as soon as Will Hays appeared on the screen, and in a voice perfectly in accord with the motion of his lips, greeted the audience and expressed the belief that Vitaphone would revolutionize the motion picture industry. Then came the first revelation that commercial synchronization of motion pictures with voice and music was practical and had developed beyond the laboratory stage.

Natural Reproduction

The voice of Will Hays seemed to come directly from his mouth. There was a certain mechanical quality, it is true, but in a moment, when one became accustomed to this almost uncanny revelation and the ear became attuned to the sound, the mechanical quality seemed to disappear and the voice of Will Hays was reproduced naturally and truly.

Other artists followed Mr. Hays. There was Martinelli, Marion Talley and other operatic stars; there were negroes playing instruments; there were bits of comedy, and then the feature picture with its perfectly synchronized musical score that would eventually be available for motion picture houses all over the world. Vitaphone had clicked. The audience was astounded. Here really was something, as Will Hays had said, that would revolutionize the motion picture industry.

As was said in the first instalment of this article, Warners expended upwards of $1,500,000 on the development of Vitaphone before they rang up on their first show. It is not difficult to explain how a good part of this money was expended in improvements as experiments proceeded at the studio.

When they first started shooting these sound subjects there was considerable difficulty with the recording and many faults in the way the sound was reproduced. It was then that the "playback" was introduced. The "playback" is a device used to pick up the music or sound from a soft wax. It is used immediately after the first wax of a subject has been made. This wax is played back to the artist and members of the recording staff, and is extremely useful in indicating to the artist his or her mistakes, so that they may be remedied in the next "take."

The "shaving machine" was another early improvement. This is used to shave new or used waxes and to place a mirror-like smooth surface on the face of the wax blanck. This proved so successful that it was immediately standardized.

The "advance ball" originally specified to Warners proved unsatisfactory, so their experts started experimenting with something new in this line. The recording engineers soon perfected an improved design. This "advance ball" is a polished hemispherical jeweled point of sapphire, and is used to keep the electrical recorder cutting a groove of definite pre-determined depth in the wax.

Originality Claimed

As soon as the initial commercial Vitaphone production was attempted it was at once evident that simultaneous recording on two or more waxes would result in an appreciable saving of time and a lower cost of production, to say nothing of the saving on the artist's voice and efforts. So far as known, up to that time, multiple electrical recording had never been seriously attempted, and the circuits developed an apparatus designed by the Warner experts absolutely original, it is claimed.

Mechanical vibration of vacuum tube elements causes undesirable noises to be introduced into the finished record, and is a source of annoyance to electrical recording companies. One of the Warner engineers, together with Mr. D. G. Blattner, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, designed a special tube socket mounting which minimizes this trouble.

"Trick" Circuits

Several "trick" circuits were evolved, and ingenious rearrangements of existing circuits resorted to. The first of these improvements consists of a "trick" circuit, whereby the "Volume Indicator" gives deflections which are more nearly proportional to the amplitude of cut on the wax than could be obtained with the "hook-up" originally specified. This circuit was developed jointly by a Vitaphone engineer together with D. G. Blattner, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

These are but a few of the improvements made by Vitaphone and the engineers of the Bell Laboratories and Western Electric Company. The costs of them had the Warners bewildered at times, but they were game, and they figured that each of them was bringing them nearer to their ultimate goal, which was a device that would record and reproduce synchronized sound and sight, and thus revolutionize the entire motion picture industry. That goal had apparently been attained. Sound pictures are certainly all the rage, and not a big producing company will be without them during the 1928-29 season.

Augusta "Circuses" Vitaphone Debut at Modjeska Theatre

MONDAY, June 11 marked an auspicious event in the chronicles of theater history in Augusta, Ga., with the presentation of Vitaphone and Movietone at the Modjeska Theater.

Never before has that city witnessed so great and wide a publicity campaign as was put forth by Frank J. Miller, city manager for Publix Theaters Corporation, for the "talkies" debut.

Besides the extensive billing of the town as a circus and the liberal space used in newspapers four weeks prior to the opening on Monday, Mr. Miller secured a tie-up with the Augusta Herald which resulted in linking the inauguration of Vitaphone and Movietone with Merchants Sales Week, and the Sunday editor of the paper carried a special 8-page section devoted to the innovation completely.

When the box-office opened on Monday at the Modjeska Theater, Vitaphone and Movietone were solidly sold. Business throughout the week indicates increased popularity, if that is possible.

Vitaphone, Movietone For West Coast

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, president of West Coast Theatres and a keen advocate of sound pictures, has announced that thirty-five Movietone and Vitaphone equipments have been installed in West Coast houses already and that additional orders to the number of 25 have been placed for the equipment. This will make a total of 60 sound reproduction devices in West Coast houses when the present orders are filled. Mr. Franklin declares that the silent photoplays with their explanatory subtitles will be obsolete within the next three years.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" to Be Synchronized

Universal has determined to synchronize "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The Movietone or Fox-Case method will be used. Arrangements were completed Monday with William Fox whereby the Fox organization will handle the entire matter of scoring the picture, originating the sound effects, engaging plantation singers and making the new negative and prints. Erno Rapee and the entire staff organization will begin on the Movietoning of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" at the earliest possible moment.

Cinephone Will Handle Several Pictures

P A. POWERS, who owns the Cinephone method for synchronizing pictures with sound, is making elaborate preparations for the handling of a number of productions for the coming season. Pictures synchronized by the Cinephone method, according to Mr. Powers can be projected through any other equipment based on the sound-on-film plan.

Just at present Mr. Powers is completing work on "The Wedding March," and it is his intention to synchronize pictures for various companies. He claims his product is the equal at least of any that is now being produced and that it is available for any company.

No plans has yet been completed for the marketing of the Cinephone device, but several are now under consideration and one will doubtless be adopted in the near future. Among other things, Mr. Powers claims for Cinephone is that the device can transfer sound impressed on discs to film.

Vitaphone Equipment for Publix Florida Houses

Vitaphone is to be installed in every Publix deluxe theatre in Florida in time for the Fall season, according to information received from Jacksonville. This is in line with the Publix intention of installing talking picture devices in their deluxe houses throughout the country, it is said.

Houses in Florida to receive Vitaphone, and possibly Movietone, include the Tampa at Tampa, the Florida at St. Petersburg, the Olympia at Miami, the Florida in Jacksonville and probably one or two other houses that are not exactly regarded as deluxe operations. The equipment to be placed in these theatres is reported scheduled to be ready for operation by September.

Baltimore New to Reopen With Sound Equipment

The New Theatre in Baltimore will reopen under the Whitehurst management August 6, according to Dr. J. H. Whitehurst, president of that company. It will then be equipped to handle Movietone, Vitaphone sound and dialogue pictures and other sound productions.

The policy will be first-run pictures and acts for their sound mechanism. This is the second first-run house to be equipped with sound mechanism, Warners' Metropolitan having been the first with Vitaphone.

To Use Photophone With "King of Kings"

Robert T. Kane, production manager for R. C. A. Photophone, and John C. Flinn, vice-president of Pathe, are arranging for a Photophone synchronization for Cecil B. DeMille's "The King of Kings" in anticipation of its general release to exhibitors as a major feature on Pathe's new program.

A well known symphony orchestra and a large choir of church singers will be used.

Fox Schedule Now Includes 22 Sound Pictures

FOX will have twenty-two sound pictures on its 1928-29 schedule, of fifty-two pictures instead of eleven as previously announced. The addition of eleven new Movietone pictures has been authorized by Winfield Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the company, who pointed out that the company already has six pictures in Movietone completed.

These are: "Street Angel," "Fazil," "Four Sons," "Mother Machree" and "Sunrise"—which already have had Broadway showings, and "The Red Dance," starring Dolores Del Rio, with Charles Farrell and Ivan Linow, which opens at the Globe Theatre June 25th.

Five more feature productions are nearing completion on the Fox lot in Hollywood. These include "The River Pirate," based on Charles Francis Coe's novel, with Victor McLaglen, Lois Moran and Nick Stuart; "Mother Knows Best," screen version of Edna Ferber's story, with Madge Bellamy and Louise Dresser; "Plastered in Paris," the first of the Sammy Cohen and Jack Pennick comedies; "Me, Gangster," Raoul Walsh's transcription of another Coe novel, with Don Terry, June Collyer and Arthur Stone, and "The Air Circus," with Arthur Lake, Sue Carol and David Rollins, produced by Howard Hawks with sound effects and dialogue.

Eleven new sound pictures now have been scheduled for immediate production with spoken dialogue and other Movietone effects. Victor McLaglen will appear in two of these, "The Baggage Smasher" and "Captain Lash." James Tinling will direct the first, and John Ford the second.

Harry D'Arrast is now at work on "Dry Martini," John Thomas' story of the Parisian boulevards, with a cast headed by Albert Gran, Mary Astor, Matt Moore, Jocelyn Lee and Sally Eilers. "Making the Grade," George Ade's Cosmopolitan Magazine story, has already gone into work under the direction of Alfred E. Green, with Edmund Lowe and Lois Moran in the leading parts.

Lional Barrymore, Marie Alba, Kenneth Thomson and Arthur Stone appear in Irving Cummings' production, "Joy Street," with full Movietone accompaniment. Farrell Macdonald will play the title role of "Riley, the Cop," under the direction of John Ford. Supporting roles will be played by Nancy Drexel, Warren Burke and Mildred Boyd.

"The One Woman Idea" will be produced by Howard Hawks from the magazine story of that name by Alan Williams, with Edmund Lowe, Mary Duncan and Earle Foxe in the principal roles. William K. Howard is preparing to direct "False Colors," a story of intrigue in Belgium, with Margaret Mann, Edmund Lowe and Lois Moran.

"All Velvet" is the story of a Broadway spender which Howard Hawks will direct with Victor McLaglen and Nancy Carroll. Madge Bellamy will appear in "Wise Baby."

Strand Gives Broadway First "All-Talkie" Program

THE Strand Theatre is the first of the Broadway picture houses to show a full "talkie" program. This was done during the past week, when not a single "person" nor accompanying act other than sound pictures were shown in connection with the feature picture, Colleen Moore in "Happiness Ahead."

This innovation was introduced by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, and it was well received. Apparently the presentation acts were not missed and also apparently the show was enjoyed by the audiences.

The program, in addition to the feature was made up of a Movietone News reel, and three Vitaphone short subjects, each of them extremely well done. Movietone News showed the usual news events including the Republican convention with parts of the accompanying speeches and sound reproduction of the enthusiasm.

The Vitaphone subjects included a number of songs and some patter by Florence Moore, Broadway star, accompanied by Gitz Rice at the Piano. Their act was received about as well as though they had appeared in person.

Hobart Bosworth was seen in a dramatic playlet entitled, "A Man of Peace." It was highly melodramatic of the ten, twenty, thirty type, which seems destined to become very popular in these short subject talkies, and it aroused plenty of enthusiasm.

Perhaps the most popular number was that of "The Ingenues," billed as "Syncopating Sweeties of the Ziegfeld Follies." They are a jazz band with incidental acts and their numbers were enthusiastically received.

Balaban, Katz Equip for Sound Films

BALABAN & KATZ have crews of men at work in all their Chicago houses, equipping them for synchronized pictures. It is expected that the work will be completed by July 1st, but to date no announcement has been made as to what pictures will be shown with the synchronization.

Seeks Patent To Apply on Movietone

J. M. Triplett, motion picture projectionist at the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, is said to have invented an improvement on Movietone apparatus on which he has applied for a patent.

Vitaphone Short Subject Reviews by Chester J. Smith

Reeks With Melodrama

"A MAN OF PEACE"—Hobart Bosworth, veteran of the stage and screen is seen to splendid advantage in this dramatic playlet, which reeks with melodrama of the old cheap variety that seems to dominate these sketches. This is the tale of a feudist mountaineer who has apparently found peace with the world through religion. The fiancee of his recently-slain brother chides him for not seeking revenge on the slayer. She departs in anger, taking his gun with her to turn over to the slayer. The latter falls into the trap and comes to kill Bosworth, who, however, has loaded the gun with blanks. A desperate struggle ensues, as a result of which Bosworth drops his victim from a high window with a rope attached to his neck. It is all very exciting and well done.

A Jazzy Jazz Band

The Ingenues—Here is a jazz band of girls from the Ziegfeld Follies, billed as Syncopating Sweeties and living up to the name. They are one of the best bands that has been seen on the screen and they have a well-arranged act which includes a number of specialties. They are a versatile lot of girls and each contributes splendidly to the act, which aside from the band numbers includes "blue" songs, jazz songs and some lively dancing.

Broadway Star Shines

Florence Moore—Miss Moore, well and favorably known as a star in musical comedy and vaudeville, is equally effective as a screen performer with her clever songs and a line of wise cracks. She is assisted by Gitz Rice at the piano and they put over an act that is bound to be popular wherever it is seen and heard on the screen. Miss Moore renders a number of songs and records extremely well on Vitaphone. In fact this record is as near perfection as any that has been seen. The entertainment could hardly be better if Miss Moore was seen in person.

The Ambassadors Play

Gus Arnheim and His Ambassadors—Another jazz band that records well on the screen. Their program is the usual one of the jazz orchestra and includes in its numbers: "I Ain't Got Nobody," "If I Can't Have You," "Mighty Lak a Rose," "There's Something About a Rose" and "Tiger Rag." All of these numbers are well rendered and clearly reproduced. They are interspersed with the usual comedy and should be well received.

An Interesting Trio

Three Brox Sisters—This trio renders three songs in this record that are going to win them wide popularity in the picture houses. Their voices are splendidly adapted for reproduction on the screen and each is the possessor of a pleasing personality. Included in their program are: "Back in Your Own Back Yard," "Kentucky Babe" and "Call of the South."

Two from Arkansas

Myers and Hanford—These "Arkansas Travelers" are familiar to vaudeville patrons all over the country and doubtless in the near future they will be just as popular with those who attend the motion picture houses. They render about the same program that has carried them for years in vaudeville. It is made up of Rube songs, musical numbers played on an ordinary saw, and dances.

Operatic Star Shines

Giovanni Martinelli—This Metropolitan Opera Company star was one of the first to record for Vitaphone. He thrilled the audience that first saw "Don Juan" at Warner's Theatre in New York and he will continue to thrill as long as he appears on the sound screen. In this one he does a solo, "Va Prononcer Ma Mort," from Act IV of the opera, "La Juive." His performance is followed by as vociferous applause as though he were appearing in person. The record is a remarkably clear one.

Cherniavsky to Compose "U" Musical Novelty

Although Universal has not decided upon a name and is not willing to give out full information about its newest novelty for exhibitors, it entered into an arrangement this week with Josef Cherniavsky for the composition and production of a musical novelty which it is claimed should add an interesting and relatively inexpensive novelty to theatre programs.

The result of a preview was the signing of a five years contract by the terms of which Mr. Cherniavsky will produce fifty-two of the novelties a year.

It is also provided that Mr. Cherniavsky will become musical advisor to Universal Pictures Corporation in any of the synchronization plans which it now has under very serious consideration. The first synchronized Universal picture will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and Mr. Cherniavsky will be Universal's contact man with the Fox Movietone officials who are going to synchronize this picture.

George Bernard Shaw to Be Heard on Movietone

George Bernard Shaw, who has consistently refused to come to America, will be seen and heard in this country for the first time next week at the Globe Theatre in New York, on the Movietone, as a part of the accompanying program for the presentation of "The Red Dance," Raoul Walsh' production starring Dolores Del Rio with Charles Farrell and Ivan Linow.

"The Red Dance" and the Shaw Movietone subject will be shown for an extended run on Broadway at the Globe Theatre beginning Monday, June 25. "Street Angel" closes an engagement of eleven weeks at this theatre to make way for "The Red Dance" and the Shaw film.

New Company Planning to Make Talking Serials

Ethlyn Gibson Production Co., Inc., has been organized in California to produce talking pictures to be released nationally in serial form. The first serial to be made is "The Five Cards," written by Frederick Chapin. Ethlyn Gibson, president of the company is to be starred in the pictures. Don Meaney, vice-president and general manager, is in New York to complete releasing arrangements.

Through negotiations just completed with Dale Hanshaw, of Hanshaw Pictures, Inc., of Hollywood, the rights and equipment of the Han-A-Phone, manufactured by Utah Radio Products Co., will be used in the making of the talking, instrumental and musical parts of the serials.

Monte Blue, H. B. Warner in Road Show

Monte Blue will be the star of a Vitaphone Road Show which will start as soon as he returns from his European vacation early in July. H. B. Warner will make his first appearance in a sound picture in the same production as a featured player. J. L. Warner has purchased Mary Imlay Taylor's story, "The Candle in the Wind" as the basis for this special.

Universal executives declare that their large percentage of finished pictures will eliminate blind booking by exhibitors and will ease the operations of the company's sales representatives as showmen will have an opportunity of previewing these pictures before signing up for the fall. There are also four more melodramas to be made. They are: "Phantom Fingers," "The Midnight Mystery," "Wolves of the City" and "Beyond the Law."

The short subjects on the Universal program are also well along on their programs. Half of the 52 scheduled have been finished, it is estimated. There are several two-reel westerns already finished, the new Oswald cartoons are coming along rapidly, and the Collegians unit is now engaged on the fourth comedy of the new series. Three or four of the Laemmle novelties, a new series of shorts, have already been previewed.

In addition to these short subjects, "Tarzan the Mighty," the first of the Universal series, is more than half completed. "The Mystery Rider," the second of the chapter-plays, is to enter work sometime next week.

M. P. T. O. Convention

The Motion Picture Theatres Owners of Southern California held its first general meeting under the direction of its new officers at the Ambassador Hotel, June 11. The purpose of the meeting was to promote good feeling between the producers and the independent exhibitors. About 75 exhibitors were present. Art Lamb, new secretary and business manager presided.

The guests of honor were: Robert E. Welsh, Laura LaPlante, Lina Basquette, Harold Shumate, Carmel Myers, George Melford, Sam Briskin, Col. Jason Joy, Mike Levee, Lois Wilson, Ralph Block and Jack Warner. Mr. Warner acted as master of ceremonies and delivered an interesting talk. Welsh, Briskin, Block, Col. Joy and Melford also addressed the gathering. It is proposed to hold these luncheons at regular intervals.

Shumate Commended

Harold Shumate, who has won to his supervisorial post with Sam Sax Productions through the departments of story creation, direction and executive administration, is being complimented for piloting Judge Ben B. Lindsey's "Companionate Marriage," to completion exactly according to schedule. In conferences relating to the potential production of Lindsey's "The Revolt of American Youth," Shumate's name has been prominently considered for the supervisorial responsibility.

Fox Engaged to Write

Finis Fox, who wrote the screen plays of "Resurrection," "Rouguna" and "Revenge," for Dolores Del Rio, has been commissioned by Edwin Carewe to write two originals for the Mexican star. The writer has practically completed one of these—a French story—which will be produced in Europe.

Signs Contract With "U"

A long-term contract with Universal has been signed by Duane Thompson, twenty-year old leading woman, who has just completed the feminine lead opposite William Cody in "Phantom Fingers." Miss Thompson's first screen role was as a chorus girl in a comedy. Since then she has had important parts and according to reports from Universal, will be assigned many more.

Two Important Houses Close Their Doors

TWO important theatres in Western New York—Loew's in Buffalo, and the Crescent, in Syracuse—closed their doors on June 2. The closing of Loew's came in the wake of rumors floating around for weeks in connection with the theatre. The official announcement stated Loew's would be closed for the summer, reopening in the fall under a new name.

Loew's has been operated under a 49-year-agreement by Loew's, Inc., with vaudeville supplied by the Marcus Loew Booking Agency of New York. It is owned by Loew's Buffalo Theatres, Inc. No dividends have been paid on the preferred stock since Jan. 1, 1927, it is understood, and none has been paid on the common stock. E. C. Garrity, manager of the house for the last three months, was uncertain whether he would remain in Buffalo, until he has conferred with executives of Loew's, Inc., of New York.

Canadian International Launches Comedy Series

The Canadian International Films, Ltd., No. 2 Unit, have commenced shooting a series of 12 two-reel comedies, with Bozo Snyder and Mona Kingsley. The series is to be completed within 20 weeks. They are to be known as "Douglas Bright Comedies."

Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, author and director of "Carry On, Sergeant," is now completing the titling of the first Canadian special. Backgrounds for the titles are being designed by Gordon Sparling, Canadian artist.

Hermine Hoffman Married to Leon Navara

Coming as a complete surprise to their numerous friends, Miss Hermine Hoffman and Leon Navara were married on May 29 in New York by the Rev. Doctor Stephen Wise. The bride is the daughter of M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany-Stahl Productions, and the groom is a pianist and was master of ceremonies for several weeks at the Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn. Al Lichtman, one of the executives of United Artists, and his wife were the only persons present at the ceremony, the bride's parents being in Hollywood at the present time.

The romance between the couple is said to have begun on a motion picture lot in Hollywood, where Miss Hoffman met her husband while playing under the name of Myrna Hoffman in Tiffany Color Classics. At that time Mr. Navara was master of ceremonies for various west coast theatres in California. Until they leave for Europe on their honeymoon trip, the couple are staying at the Hotel Astor in New York.

H. H. Thomas Forms New Distributing Co.

SYNDICATE PICTURES CORPORATION, a new company controlled by himself and associates, has been formed by Harry H. Thomas, a leading independent exchange man in the New York City territory. The new company will have its offices at the New York exchange at 729 Seventh Avenue.

Under a contract closed with the El Dorado Productions, Inc., of California, the new company will distribute a series of eight five-reel productions starring Bob Custer and a ten-episode serial, "The Chinatown Mystery," to feature Joe Bonomo. Two of the Custer vehicles have been completed. They are "The Silent Trail" and "Arizona Days." In the casts are Peggy Montgomery and John Lowell.

6 New Fox Pictures Set for Summer Release

The Fox sales department has scheduled six feature productions for release during the summer months. Four comedies and two westerns comprise the offerings, which are listed for the remainder of the current month and July.

"Wild West Romance," in which Rex Bell makes his debut, was released June 10. R. Lee Hough directed and Caryl Lincoln has the leading girl role. "Chicken a la King" is set for June 17. Directed by Henry Lehrman, it has Ford Sterling, Nancy Carroll and Arthur Stone featured. "Fleetwing," set for June 24, shows Barry Norton as a desert sheik in a story which Lambert Hillyer wrote as well as directed.

On July 1, the final Tom Mix western from Fox, "The Painted Post," will be issued. Gene Forde directed the cowboy star in this release. "The Farmer's Daughter," starring the new comedienne, Marjorie Beebe, will be issued on July 8. Direction was by Arthur Rosson. The last of the summer pictures scheduled thus far will be "Road House," co-starring Lionel Barrymore and Maria Alba, which will arrive on July 22. This is another Richard Rosson production.

First For Fannie Brice To Be "My Man"

J. L. Warner, production chief for Warner Bros., announced last week that the Vitaphone Road Show starring Fannie Brice will definitely be called "My Man." The story is based on an original vehicle written for Miss Brice by Robert Lord. Archie L. Mayo is handling the megaphone the production having gone before the cameras on June eighteenth.

"My Man" will be the first film to bring Miss Brice before motion picture audiences. During the action of the picture, she will be heard singing many of her most popular song hits on the Vitaphone.

Strong Supporting Cast in "Oh Kay"

One of the strongest supporting casts in her First National vehicle will be seen with Colleen Moore in "Oh Kay," which John McCormack is producing from the musical comedy of that name. Lawrence Gray will be leading man while Alan Hale, Ford Sterling, Claude Gillingwater and Julanne Johnston will have leading parts. Photography is to start in a few days.

Burtis Coast Bound to Prepare Aviation Stories

Thomson Burtis, author of the Russ Farrell aviation stories that have been appearing in the American Boy, has left New York for the West Coast where he will spend the next four weeks preparing scenarios from his stories to be used in the group of two-reelers in which Reed Howes will star. Howes, who after attending the Educational convention in Montreal, has also departed for California.

Charles Rogers Productions will begin work on the Burtis stories as soon as the author has completed the initial scenario. Howes has one brief engagement to fill in Los Angeles, but it is thought he will be in readiness when the scenario is completed.

Han-A-Phone to Produce Twelve Features

The Han-a-phone Company, one of the sound producing devices, has entered into an agreement whereby 12 features for release through independent exchanges are to have Han-A-Phone synchronization.

Hanshaw will produce eight features synchronized with voice and music. The four specials according to the announcement, will feature nationally known stage stars.

Old Keith Theatre in Boston to Close

THE B. F. Keith Theatre in Boston, called the "first mother house" of American vaudeville, and erected less than 40 years ago at the cost of $675,000, will be closed during the week of June 25-30. It gives way to a new house, the B. F. Keith Memorial Theatre, erected as a tribute to the founder of the Keith-Albee vaudeville, and located in Washington Street next door to the old building. The new theatre costs upwards of $5,000,000 and occupies the site of the old Boston Theatre.

To be known as "Auld Lang Syne" week, the closing vaudeville program of the old Keith structure will mark the appearance of as many who played at the theatre during the first ten years of its existence as it is possible to gather together.

MANAGERS ROUND TABLE CLUB
THE CLEARING HOUSE FOR BOX OFFICE PROBLEMS and THEATRE OPERATION

By Charles E. Lewis

Managing Director, Capitol Theatre, Middletown, Conn., and Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn.

W. H. Whyte

W. H. Whyte, manager of the Rialto theatre, Hartford, Conn., gives us several clever ideas that are worthy of any showman's attention. The first is great—especially if your company owns another theatre in the same town and contemplates closing one for the summer. We quote Mr. Whyte's letter:

During this summer the above theatre will be closed for complete alteration and renovation and, of course, there will be no activity as far as exploitation of pictures is concerned with the exception of the time when we are ready to re-open. Previous to our closing, however, we are going to distribute "guest" tickets to our patrons who may redeem them for one admission at another theatre on our circuit which is about two miles away from this house. This will serve to acquaint them with our other theatre and keep our patrons' money within the organization.

The other contribution from Mr. Whyte's letter will be published next week and we consider it one of the best business-getters that we ever heard of. Furthermore it's an idea that can be worked in any city in the whole world. That's what we like about it.

Thank you Mr. Whyte, your letter was both interesting and helpful. We are looking forward to hearing from you again.

Small Town Manager Most Progressive?

WE are prompted to ask this question because we note a very peculiar condition since the inauguration of this Club and department.

Those who will recall the opening article will remember that we meant this department primarily for the smaller towns and cities.

Now, after five weeks, we find that the response from the larger cities is as great as from the smaller towns. So we ask, which is the more progressive type of managers. Those from the big cities or those from the smaller towns? I'm watching the membership applications for developments.

Many of the letters we received were from larger cities and they found our Box Office Problems good for their use. Well, anyway you look at it, it comes down to the same answer all the time: The interchanging of ideas is a tonic for all, regardless of the size or location of your theatre. Get aboard the ship, managers, and know that you are affiliated with the livest, peppiest crowd of theatre managers in the business.

C. E. L.

Ideas that Build Summer Business

As soon as we enter upon the warm weather season our thoughts immediately turn to the old worn-out and antique expressions such as "20 degrees cooler inside." "Swept by balmy breezes" and other silly expressions that don't mean a thing to your patrons and certainly won't bring you a plugged nickle.

Psychology is a great study if you know what its all about. But why is it that so many of us don't stop to think that the right impression of a patron when entering a theatre will go a long ways in making them believe its cooler than any pet phrase you can invent or dig out of the past.

The pilot lights in the theatre should all be changed to a light green, subdue the lighting in all parts of the house that during the winter might be brightly lighted. Place greens around the lobby so that every available bit of space is like the corner of a garden, and don't confine the electric fans to the auditorium, put a few in the lobby so that the folks coming in of a hot night will immediately feel the breeze and the impression will continue while they sit through the show if you know how to work your ventilating equipment.

Cool Decorations Sell Cool Idea

We passed through a city last summer and stopped off to visit a theatre on the main street. We were first attracted by lots of hanging baskets under the marquee. Those lobby inexpensive trellis work was covered with artificial greens and plenty of the real stuff was tastefully placed about. All the lobby brackets were fitted with green bulbs, and from a corner of the lobby that everyone had to pass, three regulation 16 inch fans were blowing over a carefully concealed tub of ice. The most delightfully refreshing breeze hit you the moment you came near it. His exhaust fans were going at full blast which also caused a breeze, not too strong, to blow through the lobby. When on entering the theatre the ushers were all in white duck trousers and white shirts with neat black ties and they looked as cool as the proverbial cucumber. The entire auditorium was bathed in a soft green glow, from the ceiling cove to the pilot lights and the air was fresh and sweet from some pine aroma that he had placed about.

Why other theatres cannot copy such an idea will always remain a mystery. Take the whole of his layout and carefully go over it and you will be surprised to find how inexpensive it all is. But it doesn't help business more than all the cute phrases you can think of.

Rules to Observe In Writing Ads

Are you one of those managers who types the copy for the local newspaper ad? We have met hundreds of them in our travels and yet they tell us the reason their ads are not laid out to the best advantage is because the newspaper "don't know anything about theatrical advertising."

What an alibi. My candid opinion of a manager who sent his copy to the newspaper that way was that he ought to give the newspaper compositor part of his salary because he is doing some of that managers work.

Set up your own copy so that when it goes into the paper's composing room it is really a fac-simile of what the finished ad should look like. Whatever names or titles that you mean to stand out in larger or bolder type should be so marked on your copy. In quoting or using slogan or catch lines, have them set up in Italics so that they stand out from the rest of the ad. Remember you can cut a mat up so that the whole or only parts of it will be reproduced on your ad. Practically every newspaper today is equipped to do these things and it all helps to get away from the monotony of everyday advertising.

Another point to keep in mind is that crowding your space doesn't make it worth reading. Brevity is the predominating element in all kinds of advertising and an ad that is not crowded is most certain to be read through.

We have used a three column by eight inch ad. in a local paper and in very small type set in the centre of the whole space we made an important announcement. Subsequent business showed us that it was read, and by almost everyone who had the paper.

Put the Big Idea To Work

In Carl Laemmle's, No. 582 "Straight From the Shoulder Talk which appeared in the News of April, 28th he started by saying:

"There's nothing bigger than a big idea. There's no limit to what you can do with it." And we heartily agree with Mr. Laemmle.

Many of us get a great idea and then seem lost as to how to get the most out of it.

If you get "a big idea" why not sit down and carefully view it from every angle. Look into every possibility it presents and then do as Carl Laemmle says—Go after it with all your might and main. Treat it as though you had to pay more for it than any picture you ever showed in your house.

Although Mr. Laemmle's talk was based upon "We Americans" there is no reason why it cannot be applied to any picture.

Stores Request Duplicates of Theatre Lobby Display

The use of a lobby display as an advance announcement offered more than one advantage in a recent instance of theatre exploitation by Manager A. M. Roy, of the Tampa Theatre, in Tampa, Fla.

The display, consisting of two twenty-four sheet cutouts, was for the Tampa's showing of "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." The arrangement was so attractively gotten up and made such a fine appearance in the lobby of the theatre that Manger Roy received requests from two local music stores for replicas to use in window displays

The cutout showed the star, Lon Chaney, "straight" and as the clown he plays in the picture. A "blinker eye," made by cutting out the eye of the board and pasting white sign cloth over the aperture and setting a flasher lamp back of the insert, was placed in the cutout of the clown. Two spotlights were used to illuminate the display, a white spot on the straight face and a reddish-purple spot on the clown face.

Stickers on Records Sell Showing of "Ramona"

Manager E. R. Rogers put over an unusual tie-up with all Victor Record dealers in exploiting "Ramona" the feature film attraction at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Every record that was sold in these stores had a 3 x 4 sticker pasted on them with copy reading, "Don't fail to buy your record of Ramona—Be sure to see Dolores Del Rio in her latest success Ramona—The Melody Picture as beautiful as the song—Tivoli, June 4-5-6."

A smaller sticker in the shape of a semi-circle was pasted on all Ramona records that were sold. Copy on these stickers read, "See Dolores Del Rio in her greatest success, Ramona, the melody picture—as beautiful as the record—Tivoli, June 4-5-6."

MANAGER'S ROUND TABLE CLUB

When the list of Charter Members is published it will represent practically every REAL manager from points all over the country.

WILL YOUR NAME BE THERE?

The slogan of the club is "USE THE NEWS" and every week we offer another angle explaining this slogan. If you can suggest a way to USE THE NEWS, send it on and we will publish it.

"USE THE NEWS"

Anniversary Week Drive

Montague Salmon Stages Special Exploitation to Feature Birthday Party at Boulevard Theatre, Los Angeles

IN celebration of the third anniversary of the Boulevard theatre, Los Angeles, held during the week of May 27, Managing Director Montague Salmon, offered his patrons a special bill of entertainment and made advertising capital of the event with an exploitation campaign of extensive proportions.

The anniversary drive covered every angle of exploitation, from billing in which posters, heralds, window cards and stills were widely distributed, to a series of "special nights" in honor of various persons. The major line of the campaign centered about the feature picture, "Love Me and the World is Mine."

Billing consisted of the posting of 22 twenty-four sheets; 100 one-sheets, three different styles; display of 65 scene stills; 200 window cards, and distribution of 18,000 large heralds into homes through medium of Los Angeles Evening Herald, and a special herald announcing "Merry Go Round," offered as an added attraction on the last day of the week. This addition of "Merry Go Round" was made in response to popular demand which grew out of the fact that the majority of the featured players in "Love Me and the World is Mine" likewise were featured in the production.

City Officials Cooperate

Salmon persuaded the city officials to authorize the use of light cables crossing the street for one block on Washington, from Vermont to New Hampshire, thus illuminating in a special way the theatre block. Forty lights were used on 14 cables at almost no cost to the theatre as the manager induced merchants in the district to contribute toward the fund to defray the expense of this demonstration.

The series of "nights" included a composer's night, arranged in memory of Ernest R. Ball, who wrote the music on which the picture was based; "Lover's Night," at which 25 couples were honor guests of the management; "Mary's Night," in honor of Mary Philbin, Mary Brian, Mary McAllister, Mary Thurman and Mary Duncan, all of whom were invited to attend as guests, and "Revival Night," the final night of the week when "Merry Go Round" was offered as an added feature.

Publicity stories concerning the various nights and news pictures showing Mary Philbin cutting the Boulevard's birthday cake found space in several of the local papers. A special children's matinee and publicity about the arrival of Max Bradfield in an airplane from Oakland to act as band leader and master of ceremonies in the stage show also were publicized in the newspapers.

Other features of the exploitation were the distribution of wedding rings, made of brass and purchased at a small cost, window displays and announcements broadcast from Station KMTR.

The program headed by "Love Me and the World is Mine" included a news reel, cartoon, organ novelty, Max Bradfield and his band, and West Coast Varieties. As a special anniversary feature an elaborate stage setting, showing a back drop representing a huge birthday cake, and including beautiful drapes—all cleverly lighted, was displayed at each performance.

Stages Own "Movie Season" in Mansfield Ohio

Tim Roberts is putting over a Greater Movie Season of his own in Mansfield, Ohio. He calls it The Greater Movie Season Contest. Everybody is eligible by registering at the box office of the Madison Theatre. It's a contest dependent upon admission coupons. One paid admission entitles entrant to one coupon. One coupon gives the entrant 10 credits. The entrant is given 1,000 credits upon registration. The contest will last four week, and $1,200 in cash will be distributed as prizes. First prize is $500; second, $400; third, $200; fourth, $100. Then follows ten prizes of passes to the Madison Theatre for three months. This stunt is getting the new pictures off to a big start.

Theatre Supplies Music to Speakers at Nearby Stores

Manager E. E. Whitaker went "electric" to put on a dandy stunt for "Ramona" playing at the Publix Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C.

Two stores, each a block away from the theatre but in different directions had one of the loud speakers in front with selections of "Ramona" being played at frequent intervals.

The loud speakers were connected by wires to a victrola in the theatre office which was so arranged that the music could not be heard in the office.

Records were played at the rate of one every eight or ten minutes for three days in advance of showing.

Briefs

LOCAL news views of an important community event again proved an attraction of great box office power when the Colonial theatre in Harrisburg, Pa., offered pictures of the Public School Pageant held at Island Park, recently. Six thousand pupils of the local schools participated in the pageant and practically all the other pupils were spectators. The billing of motion pictures showing the pageant and the crowds therefore brought great numbers to the Colonial theatre, where the films were put on for the week following the school demonstration. The films were shot by Lloyd M. Gribble, who in addition to being an expert camera man, is manager of the State theatre, which, like the Colonial, is a part of the Wilmer & Vincent chain. The showing of these local pictures is believed to have been responsible for greatly increased crowds at the Colonial during the week.

THE Roxy theatre in New York City is now wearing summer dress and with the change to linen covered auditorium chairs, light draperies and the light uniforms of the house staff there is an appreciable suggestion of added comfort and coolness to enhance the appeal of the theatre during the warm weather period. Three months were taken up in preparing the complete summer outfit for the theatre. All 6,200 seats have linen covers, light colored fabrics replace the heavier draperies of winter months, a profusion of growing plants and flowers decorate the promenades, corridors and lobbies and the uniformed staff have shed their winter outfits in favor of light, cool-looking uniforms.

RAY TUBMAN, manager of the Regent and Imperial Theatres, Ottawa, Ontario, was a guest of honor at the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Canadian Capital on June 8 when he filled the role of "silent booster," distributing a large number of theatre passes as gifts. In a special address, Mr. Tubman told of the organization of Famous Players Canadian Corp. with one theatre at Toronto in 1916. The corporation now owns or controls 135 theatres throughout Canada. At the plate of each person present was a herald for the next attraction at the Regent, "Sadie Thompson," starring Gloria Swanson.

MANAGER JOHN THOMAS of the Riverside theatre, Jacksonville, continues his "Family Night" inducement, offering to admit an entire family for a coupon, which is printed on his programs, and 50 cents. He offers a prize for the largest family taking advantage of this arrangement. Last week a family of nine members won the prize. The Riverside Theatre is a neighborhood house and the family night arrangements gives a good community gathering effect. However, his patronage is not confined to the neighborhood, as families from Springfield take advantage of the coupon to attend the Riverside.

MANAGER W. H. HEMPHILL tied up with a laundry company to advertise [illegible] at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga. Each one of the seven delivery trucks of the laundry company carried banners. Copy on the banners read "With some laundries Fashion Keepers but with us, laundry returned in proper conditions—See the Picture, Rialto—Now."

Uses Mail Piece to Send Personal Endorsement of Stage Show

DICK POWELL, manager of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis adopted a mail campaign to carry over his personal endorsement of a special stage show presented at that house in conjunction with "The Hawk's Nest." The show was titled "The Summer Follies." Powell's endorsement, reproduced in typewritten form on ordinary postal cards, follows:

"I'm so pepped up about "Summer Follies," our stage show opening Saturday, that I've got to tell you about it. Our entire staff has worked hard to make it the greatest show ever at the Circle, and I believe we have succeeded. We have six wonder acts, spectacular scenic effects, and beautiful musical numbers. You'll like "Summer Follies." The picture, Milton Sills in "The Hawk's Nest," is packed with genuine mystery-romance thrills. After you see this show, I know you'll appreciate my having told you about it. Write me your opinion."

Stages Best Small Town Drive Reported on "Ben Hur"

THE campaign which perhaps ranks as the best staged in a small town for "Ben Hur" is that reported from Goderich, Ontario, Canada, where Manager A. Maxwell of the Model theatre put on a powerful and well planned drive to feature his showing of the screen spectacle based on the famous drama.

Goderich is a town of four thousand, and the Model Theatre seats three hundred and fifty. A thousand heralds were used. They were made up in batches for mailing on suburban routes according to the number of residences on carriers' routes. These were sent out the Thursday before showing.

Cards were placed in store windows and on telephone posts on main road, also on posts at the intersection of the main roads in the country.

A full page co-operative advertising tie-up with twenty-one merchants was secured. A contest with a mis-spelled word in every advertisement was run, with ten tickets offered as prizes. Fifty extra proofs of the page were pulled. One was placed in each store window that advertised. Every advertisement mentioned "Ben Hur."

Three ministers were interviewed by Mr. Maxwell, the manager of theatre, and they agreed to use "Ben Hur" for their text in their Sunday sermons.

It was arranged that school should close on Monday at three instead of four o'clock, and the teachers and school board were to come to a special matinee bringing the school children at fifteen cents each—(board and teachers, free). Children were told the day before to have their fifteen cents ready, and that they would go from the school direct to the theatre, on Monday.

Collegiate Atmosphere Pervades Theatre on "School Night"

TO lend the proper atmosphere to 'school' night, all the ushers and doormen as well as Manager McKoy and his assistant dressed as collegiate as possible. The occasion was known as "Lanier Night" in honor of the honor students of the High Schools. "Circus Rookies" was the feature picture and the theatre was the Capitol of Macon, Ga.

McKoy persuaded the Parents Teachers Association to announce the special night at all meetings and they in turn had it announced in the chapel at both the Boys and Girls High Schools, which is an unusual occurrence.

All the members of the stage band donned collegiate-looking outfits and they looked "collegiate' amidst a setting depicting banners of the High Schools and two local colleges—Mercer and Wesleyan.

The stage show was opened with the band playing "Collegiate." And then they sang a chorus followed by the playing of St. Louis Blues.

Then the leader of the band announced that it was Lanier night and the entire entertainment was in honor of Lanier High. He then introduced the President of the Senior class of the Boys High who in turn lead the band in the playing of "Glory to Lanier"—the High School song. The entire house rose and sang it.

This was followed by four acts from the schools—three from Boys High and one from Girls High. McKoy offered a prize of $10 to the winning act—the winner to be judged by the plaudits of the audience.

Enter Theatre Through Bus Built in Lobby

One of the most unusual lobby displays coming to the notice of this department in a long while is that which Manager R. S. Guiterman, of Astor Theatre, St. Paul, designed for exploitation of his showing of "Chinatown Charlie."

Guiterman gave his patrons a thrill of novelty by constructing a mask across the entrance doors and painting it to resemble a large passenger bus of the de luxe type. The mask was cut to conform to the lines of the large type of bus now so popular as a means of urban and inter-urban transportation.

Added realism was given the display by the use of real motor car wheels with pneumatic tires. The side of the bus was a series of doors through which patrons entered the theatre.

The display attracted widespread attention and is credited with having drawn into the theatre many passersby whom it caused to stop and look.

Saturday Mat Club Formed by Allentown Manager

To stimulate juvenile interest in motion picture shows in the Rialto Theatre, Allentown, Manager M. M. Shenkman has organized a "Saturday Matinee Club," limited to boys and girls under 16. The club has a two-fold purpose—one to provide recreational activities for the youngsters and the other to induce them and their parents to attend special summer Saturday matinees, the programs for which are designed especially to please the young. The recreational activities are divided into boys' and girls' groups. The boys are under the leadership of Ernest Landgraf, who assists in forming baseball teams.

Chicago Theatres to Stage Series of Beauty Contests

A number of Chicago theatres have arranged to stage beauty contests during the summer, leading up to the title of Miss Chicago and Miss Illinois. The beauties selected by the various theatres will compete against each other later at the Trianon and Aragon ball rooms, according to plans just completed by Dick Sachsel. The winners will receive a thousand dollars in prizes and a screen test by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation at Hollywood.

Tosses Pennies as Stunt for Dix Feature

TO give "Easy Come, Easy Go" the ballyhoo it deserved, Manager Chas. H. Amos of the Publix Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., used a stunt one day in advance of picture and on opening day.

A truck filled with white money bags with the dollar signs imprinted upon them and printed banners about the attraction on the sides and rear formed an interesting spectacle to all lookers-on. On top of the money bags was a boy attired in a white uniform holding one of the money bags. As the boy dug down in the bag to grab a handful of pennies, he would shout "Easy Come, Easy Go" and then heave the pennies into the crowd.

Key City Reports

New York City

BROADWAY theatres again suffered a let down in attendance last week, a resounding slap being administered by Summer and a dearth of real box office attractions. The only highlights of the week were: the excellent showing the Rivoli made by holding over "Ramona" for another week (it will stay one more) the gratification of the Strand management over what talkies have done for the house since their advent and the premiere of the Vitaphoned "Lion and the Mouse" (W.B.) at Warners.

The Roxy took the worst licking the big house has had since it opened and this time, like the preceding week, even the usual good Rothafel presentation could not pull the gate up to a proper mark. This would seem to indicate that, after all, the picture has a great deal to do with getting figures on the right side of the book. Last week's film was "Chicken a la King" (Fox).

The Paramount also fell behind its record of consistently good business with the Fields-Conklin comedy, "Fools for Luck" (Par.) and Paul Ash took the first let-down he's had since he opened here. Picture probably more to blame than Ash. The Capitol dusted off "A Certain Young Man" (M-G-M) and the gamble did not pan out any too well. The age of the film and conditions along the street were mainly responsible.

Holding over "Tenderloin" (W. B. Vita.) for a second week the Strand demonstrated that talkies are a means toward reviving attendance. Last week, the business done here, was one of the most interesting happenings along Broadway, for this house had steadily lost ground until sound picture apparatus was installed. While last week's business was not up to the mark set the preceding week, it was considerably better than many other weeks before the talkies came in.

The Rialto finished its three weeks' run of Jannings' "Street of Sin" (Par.) with nothing much to shout about in the way of strong attendance. Business just fair. George Bancroft's "The Drag Net" (Par.) followed in from the Paramount and, with a strong newspaper advertising campaign, is doing well. Evidently, a report that "Ramona" (U. A.) was being forced at the Rivoli for another week, was somewhat cockeyed. The picture did a pleasing business, and is being held for one more week.

Among the Specials trade also took a slump, as much if not a bit more than the popular priced houses. "Tempest" (U. A.) one of the hardest hitting recent attractions at the Embassy felt the depression and also "Wings," at the Criterion. Both, however, kept out of the red. The latter is but a short ways off from a year's run on Broadway.

"Fazil," the hot Fox film at the Gaiety, is running ahead of its mate "Street Angel" (Fox) at the Globe, but the latter has made a very fair run of it, and the recent falling off was to be expected. Universal's "The Man Who Laughs" is completing a two months' stay at the Central, where it has held up extremely well. Hammerstein's continues to show the Russian photoplay "The End of St. Petersburg," and the red meat-eaters of the town are still flocking to see it.

Another sufferer among the two-a-days was "The Trail of '98" at the Astor Theatre, where the seasonal depression was quite a bit in evidence. No news as yet of a successor 'though. Arch Selwyn's "Dawn" is doing a very good trade at the Times Square. The little Cameo did not do so well with Asquith's "Shooting Stars," although this English-made production received very fair press notices.

Warner Bros. latest Vitaphoned picture, "The Lion and the Mouse," is in for its first week at Warners Theatre and week end receipts were satisfactory.

Portland, Ore.

THE annual Rose Festival was the main attraction here the past week, and cooperating with the management of this event the managers of all houses put on some of the best bills of the year, and in consequence all box offices did a most satisfactory business. Cooler weather prevailed, so that park attractions did not pull so strong as in previous weeks.

Probably the outstanding show of the week was at The Broadway, as Manager Floyd Maxwell put on that rollicking high school farce "Harold Teen," and invited some 200 carriers from the local paper "The Oregonian" to be his guests at one performance. Georgie Stoll, as usual, was master of stage ceremonies, and presented Fanchon & Marco's "Opportunity" idea including Eleanora LaMai, who was a winner in a recent Fanchon & Marco contest recently. She was featured in one of the best girl revues of the season, and made a distinct hit.

"Something Always Happens" at the Portland also drew well, and if the balance of the "Big Six" screen offerings do as well Manager Blair will have no complaints. On the Stage "Happy" Phil Lampkin and the Portland stage band offered the Publix show "Gems headed by David Rubinoff violin virtuoso. Harry Linden conducted the orchestra in his usual masterful manner and Homer McDonald presided at the Wurlitzer.

The railroad comedy "Tell It to Sweeney" piled up laughter at the Columbia Theatre, and this proved a good advertiser as the house was kept well filled. Sampeitro's orchestra offered "Katinka" for his concert number.

The Oriental took care of a heavy East side patronage with "The Little Yellow House," but even a greater attraction here than the screen is Josef Srodka's Oriental Symphony orchestra, who for the week gave an arrangement of George White's "Scandals."

Santaella and his orchestra bid good by to "Rivoli" patrons after a most successful season. Those who enjoy farce comedy enjoyed "Baby Mine" with Arthur and Dane, and it drew fairly well.

At the "Blue Mouse," "Pay as You Enter" drew well, as also did the Vitaphone and movietone acts, and many festival vistors in this section saw and heard these marvels for the first time.

Preceding the usual acts at Pantages was Dolores del Rio in "No Other Woman." Also drew good patronage.

Suburban houses showed considerable increase also on account of festival guests, and they also enjoyed one of the best weeks [illegible]

New Orleans

SEVERAL days of inclement weather affected box office receipts considerably at downtown theatres during the past week. True, business has not been so very good the past few months but the last seven days have been worse than any other previous period. Managers do not know what to attribute the lack of theatre attendance. It cannot be blamed on the hot summer weather as the downtown first run houses are all equipped with modern, healthful cooling systems.

Whatever business was done the Orpheum theatre topped them all the past week with Lois Moran in "Love Hungry." This picture proved highly entertaining and turned patrons away pleased.

On the heels of the Orpheum for first honors was the new Saenger Theatre which featured Richard Barthelmess in "Wheel of Chance." It was a picture that was well liked and was shown in conjunction with the new idea Publix stage show which was above average.

Loew's State featured Florence Vidor in "The Magnificent Flirt," along with five acts of vaudeville, but business was not up to the average of past weeks. Patrons who attended the across the street neighbor of the new Saenger theatre were well pleased with the photoplay.

The Globe featured—"A Certain Young Man," with Ramon Navarro, and although it had its local premiere elsewhere, drew fairly well.

The Liberty Theatre featured Harry Langdon in "The Chaser" and business was good. The comedian has a large following in this city.

"Half A Bride," with Esther Ralston and Gary Cooper, was a delightful film and was shown at the Strand theatre. Business was slightly above that of the past few weeks.

Despite a week of inclement weather the neighborhood houses report business as being excellent. Bathing beauty revues have been staged at the various houses and these have drawn capacity audiences. Many of the houses have three feature nights a week.

Tampa

THE weather the past week was hot and the "rainy season" made its debut, with the daily showers. As a consequence the business of the theatres has been just about fair all around, with the exception of the mid-week opening of "The Lion and the Mouse" at the Victory, which went over big. This house had "Brass Knuckles" as the feature for the first four days.

The Sunday business was about average, but the other three days dropped a little under the average of the house since the Vitaphone and Movietone were installed.

The Tampa had two good cards. "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for the first half and "The Yellow Lily" the last. Both shows seemed to be well liked but they failed to pull as expected.

The Strand played to about average business with their three changes of program. "Circus Rookies" and "The Play Girl" featured two days each and "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" for three

The Franklin had "Stormy Waters" and "The Riding Renegade" for their first runs and "The Enemy" and "The Big City" for second. Business for the week was just fair.

San Francisco

FAIR business is all that was claimed, with one exception, by the first run picture houses of San Francisco last week. The main reason being the fact that it was warmer than usual and many more than usual went on motor trips or stayed longer than other times. The seasonal decline was also evident.

Loew's Warfield Theatre is the one picture house on Market street, that did better than a fair business. Here was shown "Something Always Happens." While this picture was popular, it is generally conceded that the Fanchon & Marco presentation of "Sally From Hollywood" and Rube Wolf's orchestral leading is what drew the large crowds all week, both afternoons and evenings.

"Sunrise," at the St. Francis Theatre, took a slight drop at that theatre the second week of its showing, due to the weather. The fact that the son of the local police Chief O'Brien was one of the leaders helped to attract many.

"Diamond Cuffs," as shown at the Granada Theatre, together with the Publix Revue of 30 entitled, "Tick Tock," while considered popular by those who saw it, did not bring the house receipts up to where they should have been for that week.

"The Raider Emden," as shown at the California Theatre, which closed at the end of the week, while considered a popular picture, did not bring many to that theatre. The picture is not blamed, but it is thought by many if valuable presentation acts were shown and other matters were attended to more would visit this one time popular theatre.

"One Round Hogan," together with vaudeville acts did moderately well at the Golden Gate Theatre and the same can be said of the "Wild West Show" and "Big Bluff," together with acts, as shown at the Union Square Theatre.

In the residential districts which did better, in comparison, than the down-town theatres, the Coliseum did very well with, "Her Summer Hero" and Variety Ideas on the stage. "Satan and The Woman," drew big crowds to the Alexandria Theatre.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE attendance at the Salt Lake downtown theatres is holding up remarkably well for early summer. The exceptionally cool weather has added somewhat to the very good attendance records.

The most outstanding box office receipts were received at the Victory Theatre where the presentation of "Tenderloin," Warner Brothers second talking, full length picture, has broken all records. Crowds having to be turned away during matinee performances as well as at night. This week has even surpassed the previously record breaking weeks during the showing of "The Jazz Singer" it is announced.

Dolores Del Rio in "No Other Woman" proved to be a very satisfactory drawing card at the Capitol, in addition to the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation "Dance Paintings" which was received very favorably.

Norma Shearer and Owen Moore, in "The Actress" was a tremendous success at the Pantages according to reports. This picture was shown in conjunction with the vaudeville program here.

The Gem Theatre picture program included the underworld picture, "Crook's Can't Win" with very good crowds being the result.

Adolphe Menjou with Evelyn Brent, in "His Tiger Lady" was well received by good sized crowds at the Paramount Empress Theatre.

The American did a satisfactory business this past week with Reginald Denny and Dorothy Gulliver in "Good Morning Judge."

The second showing of "The Legion of the Condemned" went over big at the Rialto, and "The Girl From Rio" also played to good houses at the new State Theatre.

Richard Barthelmess, in "The Noose," brought in very good results at the Towers Theatre.

Atlanta

BUSINESS in Atlanta theatres last week took a tumble, probably due to the arrival of a warm wave, bringing the opening of swimming pools and summer recreation sports.

Billie Dove in "The Yellow Lily" reigned supreme, giving the Howard the best receipts of the week. An ace-high presentation acted helped materially.

Next door at Loew's Grand, Ramon Novarro in "A Certain Young Man" had only fair audiences.

Keith's Georgia drew below the average week with Pola Negri in "Three Sinners," while the Capitol did good business with "Hangman's House" featuring Victor MacLaglen.

"Across the Atlantic" gathered only fair houses for the Metropolitan and the Rialto fell off with "Harold 'Teen." In neither case was it contributed to the picture, but general depression wave, opening of swimming pools and baseball games.

The Tudor stood up well with two first run westerns, while the New Alamo had a good week with a split bill and only one first run, "The Heart of Salome."

Seattle

ANOTHER quiet week with the film houses with one or two exceptions.

The first of these was the Fifth Avenue Theatre, which registered the best business in several weeks with "The Dragnet." The film was very well liked by everyone, and it was coupled with a stage show that was also very popular—"The Ingenues," a girls' orchestra from the 1928 Ziegfeld Follies. Altogether a fine program and good business.

At the Seattle Theatre, business was noticeably slack. "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" was the picture. It was decidedly entertaining but the title kept many persons away and held business down to a very low point. On the stage, the Publix stage show "Gems" was very well liked. A local dance contest also brought a few extra admissions, but it was far from a good week.

"The Mad Hour" was the attraction at the United Artists, and it was a very mediocre film that played to poor business. This was the final attraction at this house for some time, as the theatre has been closed by West Coast officials in an effort to reduce the weekly loss sustained regularly in the Northwest by West Coast Theatres.

"Hot Heels" at the Columbia Theatre was another mediocre attraction that did not fare very well. Business here is still very much below normal, with apparently no signs of an increase, at least with the present 50c policy.

At the Blue Mouse Theatre, "Across the Atlantic" played to the usual good houses. The film was rather well liked, and was backed up by a strong program of Vitaphone and Movietone shorts. Business about average.

"Hold 'Em Yale" was one of the best attractions the Orpheum has presented in many weeks, and did a little better than average business in conjunction with a good vaudeville show.

Pantages played to the usual fair houses with "News Parade" and vaudeville.

"Bachelor's Paradise' was the Embassy attraction, failing to score very big. Neighborhood and suburban houses are off, also, in a noticeably poor spring theatrical season.

Baltimore

PATRONAGE at the first-run moving picture theatres here for the week beginning Monday, June 11, was fairly good.

Pola Negri came into her own in "Three Sinners" as the feature picture at Loew's Century. The part exactly suited her and the play being a good one of the sophisticated type, it appealed to patrons immensely. A presentation act entitled Seeing Things was also on the same bill headed by Ted Claire and his orchestra. Business was good throughout the entire week.

At the Little theatre, "Siegfried," the UFA production, starring Paul Richter, was presented by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., and proved an extremely entertaining vehicle for good patronage all the week at that house, with 250 seats. It was shown for one night several months previously at the Lyric.

"Glorious Betsy" starring Dolores Costello with Vitaphone musical accompaniment and dialogue, proved itself capable of pulling very strong for its fourth week at Warner's Metropolitan.

At the Stanley Richard Barthelmess pulled well with his latest, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," and his acting was well liked by patrons in it. It drew fairly well during the first part of the week and built to good business during the latter part of the week. On the same bill was a stage presentation act entitled Radio Nights with Pep Kaufman and his band heading the aggregation of talent.

The Keith-Albee New Garden theatre had "The Play Girl" starring Madge Bellamy as the feature film attraction in addition to seven acts of Keith-Albee high class vaudeville and the patronage was considered good.

"Broadway Daddies," starring Jacqueline Logan, was the feature film at Keith's Hippodrome where five acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville of family time was presented with the picture. Business for the week was fairly good.

"Sadie Thompson," starring Gloria Swanson, went into its second week at Loew's Valencia and business was good for the second six days.

Dallas

AT the Melba "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" with Richard Barthelmess enjoyed fair business, and was well recieved. Some unusually good Vitaphone shorts completed the program. For the past four weeks The Melba has enjoyed a consistent patronage, although receipts have not been large.

"The News Parade" with Nick Stuart and Sally Phipps at the Majestic brought the house a good gross for the week. Jack Little headed the Interstate vaudeville, and accounted for more than his share of the business.

"The Dragnet" with George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent checked off another good week for the Palace, although far below capacity. This picture caused much comment due to abundance of gun play, but pleased the majority. The Publix presentation which completed the program was a flop.

"A Night of Mystery" with Adolphe Menjou, "Two Flaming Youths," co-starring W. C. Fields and Chester Conklin, enjoyed a fair attendance at the Old Mill.

The Capitol, showing "Good Morning, Judge" with Reginald Denny stacked up about the same, and totals for the week were not so good.

"Ladies' Night In A Turkish Bath with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill, "The Dove" with Norma Talmadge, and "Skyscraper" with William Boyd, brought satisfactory houses to the Arcadia, although a little below the Arcadia's high average.

Albany

DESPITE a week of exceptionally fine summer weather, the motion picture theatres of Albany played to most satisfactory business, generally speaking last week. In fact, few if any of the exhibitors in Albany, have not made so much as a single complaint thus far this summer relative to business. Some of the theatres are running far ahead of a year ago, while others admit that they are holding their own and appear to be well satisfied with box office receipts.

One of the best business getters of the past week was Richard Barthelmess in "The Wheel of Chance" at the Mark Ritz, in Albany.

The Mark Strand, playing "The Yellow Lily," also went over well, being coupled with Vitaphone presentations and also featuring views of the Republican convention at Kansas City.

The Leland ran to more than fair business with "Dressed to Kill," with an added feature showing the wedding of Governor Smith's daughter which no doubt attracted hundreds to the theatre, who could not get within a block or two of the Cathedral while the wedding was in progress.

The Clinton Square theatre in Albany continues to go over well with first run double features although last week hardly measured up with "The Joy Girl" and "The Scarlet Dove," to certain other weeks.

Proctor's Harmanus-Bleecker all continues to hold up well with its vaudeville and pictures and with a number of gift nights throughout the week.

Tom Mix and his horse "Tony," spent a couple of hours one evening during the week, with the result that over 3,000 persons flocked to the railroad station or heard Mix in a short speech at Proctor's Grand theatre.

Good business is being reported by the neighborhood theatres. In Troy, the American, one of the Stanley houses, closed on Saturday and will remain so until the latter part of August.

The Troy theatre did a most satisfactory business for four days with "Rose Marie," but the latter part of the week showing Lois Moran in "Don't Marry," did not pan out any too well.

The Lincoln in Troy played to consistent business throughout the week with "The Wheel of Chance."

Proctor's Troy theatre used Bebe Daniels in "The 50-50 Girl" to good business.

Cincinnati

BUSINESS in the Queen City took somewhat of an upward turn during the past week, and exhibitors, although rather encouraged, are not particularly jubilant, as the gross is still far below the normal mark.

"The Drag Net" rounded out the second and final week at the Lyric, and did a satisfactory business for both engagements.

The Albee with Dolores Del Rio in "No Other Woman," together with the stage attractions, held up nicely, although the S.R.O. sign was not in evidence at any time during the week.

"A Girl in Every Port" at the Capitol, together with the Vitaphone and Movietone, got a satisfactory break.

"Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath" at Keith's failed to attract the multitudes despite its title. The critics were not any too kind to the picture in their reviews. Besides the attraction was seen here in stage form some time ago, and did not click to any great extent.

The Strand with "Chicago After Midnight" got a good share of the money for the week.

Tim McCoy in "Wyoming" at the Family for first half of the week and "One-Round Hogan" for the balance did nicely for this house, which maintains a 25 cent top admission.

The Palace vaudeville and pictures, had a good week, while neighborhood houses report business as being "only fair."

Pittsburgh

LOEW'S Penn did a very good business for the week. Norma Shearer in "The Actress," as the screen presentation, and a Publix unit, "Flapperettes" as the stage offering. A Charlie Chase comedy, "All For Nothing," was acclaimed by the newspaper critics as the best thing on the bill.

The Stanley theatre turned in a better-than average week with "The Drag Net." This film production saved the show, inasmuch as the stage revue entitled "In Dutch" was very weak.

The Grand had "Hangman's House," and average business was the result. Afternoon business is better since the prices were recently cut in twain. An "Our Gang" comedy, "Chicken Feed," went over big with the audiences. One act of vaudeville, just fair entertainment.

The Regent in East Liberty and the Olympic, downtown, played "Ham and Eggs at the Front," with Vitaphone accompaniment. Business was disappointing at both theatres.

Loew's Aldine with five acts of vaudeville and Reginald Denny in "That's My Daddy," had just a fair week's business. The Denny film won much praise from the newspapers and the fans.

The Liberty did an average business with "Lady Be Good," and had a vaudeville act as usual. These acts, as a rule, are very poor.

Five acts of vaudeville and Lois Moran in "Don't Marry" at the Davis, did average business.

The Cameraphone, with a double bill—John Gilbert in "St. Elmo" and Viola Dana in "That Certain Thing," had a profitable week, getting fifty cents, while other East End theatres were charging forty.

Ottawa

DESPITE race week and other outdoor activities, the exhibitors of Ottawa, Ontario, managed to get along very nicely during the week of June 11. Under daylight saving a number of the managers are finding that patronage is quite heavy but that the theatres do not fill up until 9 P. M.

The most popular picture in town was "Doomsday," starring Florence Vidor at B. F. Keith's theatre, where big crowds enjoyed it. The story was clever, plausible and substantial—something worth while.

Although there were excellent crowds at the Regent theatre, there was no great enthusiasm for "Sadie Thompson" because of its hard-boiled theme. Patrons like the interesting characterizations.

Laura LaPlante made many friends at the Centre theatre for her work in "Finders Keepers." The consensus was that she was highly commendable—and better than in recent other appearances.

Those who wanted straight amusement flocked to the Imperial theatre where they saw "Why Sailors Go Wrong." The comedy situations in this one were so good that the people were telling each other about them next day.

The Rex theatre did a land-office business with a great combination consisting of second local run of "Speedy" and the first chapter of the serial "Trail of Tiger."

The Columbia was also the mecca for picture fans and the program, comprising "Clancy's Kosher Wedding" and the first chapter of "Masked Menace" was satisfactory all around—even to Manager Nolan.

Stick up Lon Chaney's face in front of the Fern and Manager Robertson can count on big patronage. This was the case in the presentation of "London After Midnight." The serial-followers were getting nicely into the story of "Hawk of the Hills" with its second chapter on the screen. A serial at the Fern is as good as a "Ben Hur."

Cleveland

CONTINUED cool weather would have brought the business at local theatres way above average, but, for one exception, it totaled about fair.

The one exception was the William Haines picture, "Telling the World," which played at the Allen theatre. It was a knockout. The house was jammed all week. Haines, at his best, presented in a role which Americans like to class as "typical," made an irresistible combination. The Publix Collegiate Revue "Rah-Rah-Rah" was specially fitting to the picture and to the fact that it was the end of the school and college year.

"The Legion of the Condemned" made a good record at the Stillman during its second week. The picture received flattering comments from all local critics, among them that "this war aviation movie has better drama and more romance than Avia[illegible] Davis, Press.

"A Girl in Every Port" did just fairly well at Keith's Palace. A picture full of rollicking comedy it is good popular entertainment, and should prove a big attraction in subsequent run houses.

"Mademoiselle From Armentieres" was a disappointment to those who saw it at the State. It seemed to lack charm. Business was only fair.

"The Scarlet Dove" did nice business at the Cameo. The picture is colorful, romantic and full of excitement.

Keith's East 105th Street had good business all week with "The Wagon Show" as the featured attraction. This has the universally popular circus atmosphere with novelty of plot and romance mingled with adventure, which makes for popular entertainment. A lobby circus show helped to put this picture over well.

Reade's Hippodrome had just passable business with "The Whip Woman." The picture old in theme, did not click with the audiences.

"Wings," announced to close its ten week road show at the Colonial, was still going well enough to justify extending the engagement. It will play at least one week more.

Subsequent run house business is not at all good, according to reports of theatre owners in the neighborhoods. They are not reducing the exhibition time, and fewer than ever before are closing for the summer.

Kansas City

NOTHING could serve as a barometer to the attendance at Kansas City first run houses this week, as the Republican national convention served to swell box office receipts far beyond a mark that they seldom reach.

At the Mainstreet Sue Carol in "Walking Back" did a great week's business, holding up well both afternons and nights.

Loew's Midland, for the first time since the opening week, actually needed its 4,000 seating capacity with "The Legion of the Condemned." Night attendance was exceptionally good, while matinee crowds were far better that in several months previously.

"The Lion and the Mouse" at the Globe played to large crowds, as did "Prince of Broadway" at the Capitol.

"The Road To Ruin" was held over another week at the Liberty and continued to draw well, having a strong appeal to the flapper element, many a politician also finding his way to a seat in the theatre.

At the Newman Adolphe Menjou in "His Tiger Lady," featuring Eveyn Brent, was a good drawing card and the Newman, for the first time in several weeks, took on an atmosphere of "good business."

"Don't Marry" at the Pantages had its appeal to the younger generation, which supported it well.

Nothing special in the way of exploitation was used by any of the houses.

Harrisburg, Pa.

A DAY or two of sultry weather failed seriously to affect the "batting average" of the Harrisburg theatres in a week that otherwise was ideally cool for mid-June. The "late Spring," in fact, has been a godsend for Central Pennsylvania picture theatres offsetting to some extent discouraging factors such as industrial depression in some sections, conspicuously in the coal mining regions; for the cool weather has been sending those who have money to spend for amusements to the theatres rather than to the outdoor parks most of which opened about Memorial Day, May 30.

"Ramona," starring Dolores Del Rio started the week with a rush of business at Loew's Regent, and was sustained throughout the six days, notwithstanding some who saw the picture were somewhat disappointed in the film interpretation of the story, although conceding splendid acting by Miss Del Rio and exceptionally good photographic effects.

George Bancroft in "The Drag Net," brought good financial results to the Victoria. Bancroft's he-man style of acting is developing a big following in Harrisburg.

Milton Sills, in "Burning Daylight," brought average patronage to the Colonial.

Lois Moran, in "Don't Marry," made a distinct hit at the State the last three days.

Tim McCoy in "The Law of the Range," co-starring with Joan Crawford, was shown simultaneously in two Harrisburg theatres—the Broad Street and the Russell. They are neighborhood houses, located in opposite ends of the city, so that the conflict of dates had no adverse affect on the business done at either theatre.

At the Broad Street there was a double bill, including Robert Agnew in "She's My Baby," in addition to the McCoy picture.

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE'S downtown theatres had a very good week, especially the last few days of the run when the city was crowded with delegates to the Saengerfest.

The Wisconsin with "Sharp Shooters" as the feature was crowded at practically every performance. The acts accompanying the feature were well exploited and were accountable for a good share of the popularity of the Wisconsin this week.

The Merrill did good business with "Hangman's House."

"A Night of Mystery" at the Alhambra was a popular picture and business was very satisfactory.

Fair business was accorded the Strand where "The Road to Ruin" was featured. "Ramona" finished an unusually long run at the Garden, and throughout its entire stay kept up good average business.

"The News Parade" was a popular addition to the bill at the Orpheum. The Riverside offered "Ladies Must Dress" as the photoplay feature and the resulting business was very good.

The neighborhood houses, the Oriental, Garfield, Uptown, Tower and Modjeska showed "The Jazz Singer" and at each house the crowds began to appear at 6:30 and continued through to the last performance.

The Milwaukee theatre found business very satisfactory during the showing of "The Gaucho."

"Rose Marie" drew very well at the Colonial. Altogether, the neighborhood theatres had a very satisfactory week.

Opinions on Pictures

Chicken a la King

Light But Nourishing

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS dish, when properly served, is always tasty. And looming large on the Fox menu it provides light nourishment easily digested because it has been cooked to a turn. The very title suggests a "kick" and it has been garnished with paprika and plenty of flavor. It doesn't tax the imagination, but speeds through its hour with first rate highlights.

The cast is excellent. The chicken, played by Nancy Carroll, is a treat to the eye in her role of a chorus girl. Nancy is experienced in chorus work, and the part fits her like a glove. It is her job to frame a wayward husband and make him return to his anxious spouse. Ford Sterling has the hubby role, and he gags it to a fare-you-well. He kicked over the traces in the first place to rescue his sweet brother-in-law from a chorine. And so the fireworks are released. Arthur Stone, playing the daffodil, is good for much laughter.

Altogether it is a tidy little picture, one which is sophisticated without going too snappy. It is excellently mounted, superbly directed and acted with genuine color.

Drawing Power: Suitable for any house, even first run. Cast and title should pull them. Exploitation Angles: Tease the title. Bill as zippy comedy colored with life among the chorus. Feature Nancy Carroll, Fred Sterling and Arthur Stone.

THEME: Farce-comedy of wayward husband framed by wife and chorus girl to remember his marital vows.

Produced and Distributed by Fox Films. Length, six reels. Released, June 7, 1928. The Cast: Nancy Carroll, George Meeker, Arthur Stone, Ford Sterling, Carol Holloway, Frances Lee. Director, Henry Lehrman.

Painted Post

Not Up to Usual Mix Standard

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS latest Tom Mix vehicle for Fox is considerably slower than the Western star is accustomed to. It drags along through six reels of almost actionless stuff to a climax that is completely unconvincing. Mix pictures are usually synonymous with action. One can always depend upon a variety of thrills, but it is not so with this one.

For the most part the story drags while the star and the villain vie for the attention of the newly-arrived girl, who has come to sketch western types for a magazine. The scenes border more on light comedy than on hard-boiled Western stuff. The climax is too far fetched even for a Mix to get away with. Tom is battling a band of desperadoes who have made away with a payroll that was left in Tom's keeping. They are barricaded in a cabin and have the girl in their possession. The star mounts an adjoining high windmill and with the assistance of Tony succeeds in swaying the windmill until it falls through the roof of the cabin and precipitates Mix into the midst of the bandit gang. Single handed he battles them to a standstill until the arrival of Al St. John on a bicycle. The latter binds the bandits in a chain and leads them back to Painted Post while the star does a fadeout with the girl. Natalie Kingston is the Mix leading lady and she does her work well.

Drawing Power: Only the popularity of the star may put this one over. It will not get by on the action in the story. Exploitation Angles: The star's name and the thrilling rescue from a-top the windmill.

THEME: Western melodrama in which the sheriff, with the assistance of the girl outwits the desperado band and the loot is recovered and the girl saved.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, 4,962 feet. Released July 1, 1928. Cast: Tom Mix, Natalie Kingston, Philo Mc Cullough, Al St. John, Fred Gamble. Directed by Eugene Ford. Story by Harry Sinclair Drago. Scenario by Buckleigh S. Oxford. Cameraman Dan Clark.

Fools for Luck

Nothing Much to Ballyhoo Here

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE comedy team pictures are fast losing their sting. Let a couple of comedians repeat their oft tried gags too often and nothing much of consequence is left to make a fuss over. W. C. Fields and Chester Conklin try hard to make this one mirthful, but it grows tiresome long before the finish is reached. Each funmaker uses the other as a foil, but the stuff isn't there. As a result the piece has a tough time to keep one's interest alert.

W. C. plays a fake oil promoter trying to hoodwink the big poobah of a small town. Chester is this particular poobah, who swallows the other's "racket," hook, line and sinker. And so do most of the villagers. But the tables are turned when real oil does spout at the end. This is your comedy which might be catalogued as formula Number 16. A slight love interest attempts to intrude. But it doesn't mean anything. Consequently Sally Blane and Jack Luden appear superfluous.

It is mostly a series of gags with Fields putting on his Follies pool table "business" to bring forth the biggest laugh. Conklin, usually reliable with a decent sort of characterization, is lost in the hokum. It needs strong support from the rest of your program.

Drawing Power.: If the comedy team is still popular at your house you can feature the stars. Suitable for program houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up comedy team and feature romantic interest.

THEME: Comedy of fake promoter who gets his just deserts at a time when he appears most successful.

Produced and Distributed by Paramount. Length, 5,758 feet. Released, May 5, 1928. The Cast: W. C. Fields, Chester Conklin, Sally Blane, Jack Luden, Mary Alden, Arthur Housman. Director, C. F. Reisner.

So This Is Love

Pleasant Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Gaulx)

THIS is one of the best productions to come from the Columbia studios within the last few months. A pleasant, light comedy—it clicks all the way. For one thing, the humorous touch is cleverly injected and it is so construed—in characterization work and incident—that comedy is always way up front.

Johnny Walker, Shirley Mason and William Collier, Jr., are its three leads. Walker as the dumb pug is extremely likeable and funny. He works hand in hand with the other two to make the whole piece very amusing. Credit for the speedy tempo of the picture, its frills of humor and the exhilarated performances of its principals undoubtedly goes to Director Frank Capra.

One of the best things about this nice little tidbit is its climax wherein Collier and the girl get a sweet revenge upon the dumb prizefighter. Collier, who knows very little about the manly art is desirous, nevertheless, of giving Walker a fine pasting and to this end Miss Mason cunningly works. She achieves by feminine guile and subtlety the downfall of the confident pug by coaxing him to break training just prior to the fight. She stuffs him with an explosive mixture of eatables and tells Collier to concentrate his glove attack upon his opponent's tummy. This makes an hilarious climax and the many laughs which attend the rout of the pug will leave the fans in a pleasant frame of mind.

Drawing Power: Okay for all types of houses. Exploitation Angles: Bill as a comedy of a pugilist downfall.

THEME: A domineering pugilist has stolen his girl, so a boy plans revenge. He enters training and is matched to fight his enemy. On the night of the scrap, his girl fills the pugilist with good things to eat so that he is unable to give his best. The boy socks him plenty and wins the girl back again.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released, February 6. Length, 5,611 feet. The Cast: Johnny Walker, Shirley Mason, William Collier, Jr., Ernie Adams, Carl Gerard, Wm. H. [illegible], Jean Laverty. Director, Frank Capra. Story, Norman Springer. Adaptation, Elmer Harris.

"Bath Time"

(Pathe Sportlight—One Reel)

AN ideal subject for Summer presentation, this latest Grantland Rice Sportlight, touches on a number of the most popular water sports of this season. The film brings one back to the days of the old swimming hole, and shows youngsters performing various feats of [illegible] background. A high light of this release is pictorial trip to the shores of Hawaii, where the audience will be thrilled by the natives, who speed along the crests of the waves, in a daring exhibition of surf-board stunts. The producer of these single-reelers still continues to "chalk up" a fine record of entertainment.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

Happiness Ahead

Fair Enough and Should Satisfy

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU'VE seen this one before under various guises, but when it is worked out as well as possible, why carp over the obvious note. The point is William Seiter has done a neat job in moulding together a orthodox plot and bringing forth a homey little picture, charged with pathos and heart appeal. Colleen Moore is the star, and she escapes from comedy characterizations long enough to portray a trusting country girl who marries a city crook and effects his redemption.

She effects a smug character study, and injects real feeling into the part. It is her task to be ignorant of her husband's whereabouts, thinking him in a distant clime when he is really in prison. He uses a decoy to mail his letters.

Such a story must point its conflict. The crook, excellently done by Edmund Lowe, went straight when he met the girl. But in taking her to the city he falls in the clutches of the law, especially when his neglected light of love aids the police. The new girl friend understands the situation perfectly, and forgives and forgets.

It is free from the maudlin note, a note which could easily spoil it. But it is directed and acted with sympathy and understanding. As a result nothing went wrong in its production. It is human and likeable.

Drawing Power: Star's popularity. Edmund Lowe's talent for crook roles. Title. Theme. Suitable for all types of houses. Great for neighborhoods. Exploitation Angles: Concentrate on popularity of Moore-Lowe combination. Play up sacrifice of heroine and redemption of crook. Work the title.

THEME: Romantic Diana of sacrifice and redemption of crook.

Produced and Distributed by First National. Length, seven reels. Released, June, 1928. The Cast: Colleen Moore, Edmund Lowe, Lilyan Tashman, Edythe Chapman, Charles Sellon, Arthur Housman, Robert Elliot, Jr., Edward Davis, Virginia Sale, Dione Ellis, William Worthington. Director, William Seiter.

Lady Raffles

A So-So Crook Drama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AS it is not burdened with a vigorous supply of dramatic incident or suspenseful episode this crook drama shapes up as just a fair piece of celluloid entertainment. It provides Estelle Taylor with a languid role offering little spontaneity or life. The actress who etched so fine a portrait as the Madonna Lucrezia Borgia is, in this opus, a subdued and ofttimes ineffective heroine. Roland Drew, the former Walter Goss, is also unimpressive as the rich young man who plays opposite.

Estelle is a lady crook. At least she's a crook until the final reel when after the real theives have been captured she reveals herself as an agent of Scotland Yard. Do not overlook Lilyan Tashman as her female rival. Hers is a much more convincing portrayal than Miss Taylor's. The dramatic context of the film consists of the maneuverings of the forces representing right and wrong—all done in the usual cut and dried manner. What is needed here is more vigor, a dramatic surge which would have lent these scenes an intensity that the spectator feels is missing.

Summarized, "Laddy Raffles" is just fair as a feature for neighborhood houses.

Drawing Power: Average for the box office coffers. But with the warm weather upon us it may prove an attraction of no less calibre than the average "summer" film. Exploitation Angles: Bill as a crook drama. Also label the star as wife of Jack Dempsey and recall to the minds of the fans her characterization in "Don Juan."

THEME: Crook drama. Lady crook, a representative of Scotland Yard, poses as a law-breaker in order to capture a notorious pair. While bringing these two to justice, she falls in love with a wealthy young man whose love she wins.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released, January 25. Length, 5471 feet. The Cast: Estelle Taylor, Roland Drew, Lilyan Tashman, Ernest Hilliard, Winifield Landis. Director, R. Wm. Neill. Story, Jack Jungmeyer and Fred Stanley.

The Siren

Strong Dramatic Stuff

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

COLUMBIA has a strongly pictured drama here of the plight of a woman who almost paid the death penalty. Not exactly a pleasant theme, nevertheless such a type of story can be the motive for the introduction of powerful human emotion. They have taken advantage of every possible bit of horror and gruesomeness showing the march to the gallows of the condemned. Of course, this particular sequence can be strongly objected to because it is not exactly conducive to pleasant thoughts. But still there is a great deal of showmanship in exploiting such tragedies with us in our present times.

Dorothy Revier and Tom Moore are the leads and Norman Trevor is the heavy thirsting for revenge. This trio turns in good performances and that fact taken along with the strongly dramatic theme makes for an intense drama. The girl is accused of causing the death of a man, is found guilty by the jury and sentenced to hang. Here they have taken out the funeral crepe and tinged the scenes with sombreness. Indeed, it may be repulsive to some. But on the other hand others may like its smack of realism. It is strongly pictured any way you look at it.

An audience attraction, best suited for neighborhood houses and the like.

Drawing Power: For neighborhood audiences and houses which also feature vaudeville. Exploitation Angles: With its theme of capital punishment you can inaugurate an essay contest among neighboring school children or among your adult clientele.

THEME: Drama of a woman accused and found guilty of murdering a man. Her supposed victim is really alive and instigating false witness against her. The woman is almost executed, but the hero in time exacts the straight evidence from a witness and saves the girl while the "victim" is imprisoned.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released, December 20. Length, 5996 feet. The Cast: Dorothy Revier, Tom Moore, Norman Trevor, Jed Prouty, Otto Hoffman. Director, Byron Haskin. Story, Harold Shumate.

Ladies of the Mob

Satisfying Crook Story of Redemption

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'VE taken Clara Bow out of the "it" roles to bask her under the emotional flame of drama—and she does very well. Indeed, she does so well by the role that provision should be made toward giving her a chance to do a Bernhardt occasionally. In this picture she is married to a gangster and plays along in crime until the boy friend insists in toting a "gat" to bump them off. Then she manages to make him hors de combat.

The picture is well developed and builds entertainingly. A prologue shows that the heroine's father was executed for murder. So one can see why Clara wants her man to give up the ways of crime. It is a redemption story and looks very realistic in its arrangement of scenes and incident. It should stimulate a deal of thought since the conflict in the action has to do with the making over of a man. The Bow girl plays the part with genuine feeling, and succeeds in investing it with true color and deportment. Richard Arlen is a trifle too refined for the part of the gangster, but he comes through with flying colors. Altogether it is a satisfying picture.

Drawing Power: Play up title and feature Clara Bow who gets away from sexy roles. Feature Richard Arlen. Bill as convincing story of a crook's redemption. O. K. for every type of house. Exploitation Angles: Tease the title and bill as convict's story of crime. Stress the fact that Clara Bow has developed into an emotional actress.

THEME: Crook melodrama of a gangster's redemption, effected by his girl friend, who knew a trick or two about the underworld.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, June, 1928. The Cast: Clara Bow, Richard Arlen, Helen Lynch, Mary Alden, Bodil Rosing. Director, William Wellman.

"A Cow's Husband"

(Fox—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE are a lot of laughs in this animal comedy, but it would have been better if some of the comedy were not so long-drawn out. It has the fault of many of these short comedies and that is too much effort is made to keep it continuously funny.

Fred Spencer and Mary Jane Temple provide the human element of the picture, with a bull and a cow making up the balance of the cast. Spencer is undoubtedly funny and has some good material with which to work. There are many situations that provoke a lot of mirth, particularly when the cow and the bull get into the picture, but entirely too much footage is wasted in Spencer's effort to open a milk bottle, which actually consumes almost all of the first reel. There are laughs, however, interspersed.

The sequence in which the bull breaks up the Darkey parade, which is celebrating "The Sacred Order of the Cow" ceremony is very laughable as are the subsequent events in which the human-propelled Darkey bull becomes separated into two parts to the consternation of Spencer.

"Oh Mama"

(Educational—One Reel)

HERE'S another Cameo comedy the chief attribute of which is its snap in unfolding. In it are Jack Miller, Lucille Hutton and little Jackie Levine. Married life with its squabbles between man and wife is its theme. This popular topic permits an interplay of gags, mostly old. Miller works industriously and the same can be said for the pretty Miss Hutton and the talented Jackie. Jules White directed.

A Ship Comes In

It Moves the Heart Strings

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

GRIPPING human emotion interwoven through the scenes of this simple story and interpreted by some splendid acting make this feature worthy of a place on any exhibitor's program. There is a wealth of pathos in its scenes—enough to bring moisture to the eyes of most any fan. Do not get the impression that it is cheap hokum, for it is none of that. Rather, it possesses a richness of sentiment, brought out to the fullest degree in the artistic playing of the leads and the sympathetic direction. A bid was made for tears, but not an obvious one that betrays a desire to empty the eye ducts at any cost. There is a conservative note of refinement in the acting and direction which figures strongly to make its scenes simple but powerful.

Like "We Americans," its theme is the first contact of immigrants with America. Around the simple thread of story has been packed some suspense and much of drama. Parental love, patriotism for a new country, the struggle of an immigrant to achieve citizenship are all touched upon. Though pathos strongly predominates, there are little patches of comedy to relieve the tautness. The story is wonderfully moving in its climax—and wonderful, too, is the acting.

We would like to dwell on this latter attribute of this picture, but we must tell you that it is fine and praiseworthy and that is all. These same adjectives refer to the production tone of the picture, good all the way through.

In the face of these qualities is the title, which is more poetic than definite. It will not convey much to the masses.

Drawing Power: A fine picture, human to the core. Its leads and its theme (if publicised) should offset its title which is a handicap. Exploitation Angles: Ballyhoo the theme. The story is laid during the time of the war, therefore, a display of flags is appropriate. Play up the fine acting and the sincerity of the film.

THEME: Story of a family of immigrants, who come to America and give their boy to the cause of their adopted country in the war. The father is accused of a crime, but he is soon freed and goes back to comfort his broken-hearted wife. They give all that one can give to their new country.

Produced by De Mille Studio. Distributed by Pathe. Released, June 4, 1928. Length, 7 reels. The Cast: Rudolph Schildkraut, Louise Dresser, Milton Holmes, Linda Landi, Fritz Feld, Lucien Littlefield, Robert Edeson, Louis Natheaux. Fine direction by William K. Howard.

Fangs of Fate

A Satisfactory Number

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LOVERS of out-of-doors, action dramas will be satisfied with this one which has clean-cut acting, a good story, and plenty of drama, which all contribute to making it a good picture and one which will satisfy the majority of fans. It serves as a vehicle for Klondike, the new dog star. Mighty intelligent, this dog can hold his own with any of the screen canines. He is easily one of the best.

A criticism that might be advanced applies to the director, who in directing the players, allowed the villain, Henry Herbert, spoil a good characterization by going too melodramatic in his heavy moments. The other players provide fresh, suitable portraits, and are all successful in warding off touches of unreality which are bound to creep in these fast-moving action dramas.

Briefly the story is as follows: Having invented a contrivance which indicates the whereabouts of oil, a young man, brother of the heroine, is killed by his enemy, who had tried to double-cross him by getting the confidence of the agent of an oil corporation anixous to acquire the invention. The rogue accuses the oil man of the murder, while he himself purloins the plans and is playing the innocent. The dog, however, locates the plans and brings them into the court room while the trial is in progress. Thus exposed, he tries to run away, and in terror of his dog pursuer blurts out the truth.

Drawing Power: A good attraction for all houses that cater to lovers of melodrama. Exploitation Angles: Play up Klondike as one of Hollywood's newest and best dog actors. Cut outs of the dog are an attractor.

THEME: Action drama of events occuring in a California oil area. Inventor is killed, but his murderer, who had tried to shift the blame, is circumvented by the dead man's faithful dog.

Produced by Fred J. McConnell Productions. Distributed by Pathe. Released, June 24, 1928. Length, 4,476 feet. The Cast: Klondike (dog), Arnold Fray, Henry Herbert, Robert Reault, Kathleen Fisher. Story, Earl W. Johnson. Cameraman, Edward Snyder. Director, Noel Smith.

"The Lost Laugh"

(Educational—One Reel)

IF Wallace Lupino did not possess talent as comedian, he would, of course, be eclipsed by his more famous brother. But as he is the possessor of no little pantomimic ability, he, also, it can be said, is doing considerable to strengthen the name of Lupino.

This Cameo, like its brothers, is fast and peppy. Lucky for it that it is so, because there is really little newness in its chief gags. A few clever captions are introduced, but we'll gainsay in the face of these and Lupino's strivings that the piece is mediocre, nevertheless. For the comedian's undoubted talents do not blossom sprightly as he is for the most part the recipient of oozy masses hurled at his face. If you are looking for a higher type of comedy, you will not find it here.

Stephen Roberts directed the number and Lucille Hutton and Monty Collins are seen in support. Everything considered, the comedy, although a fairly funny Cameo, does not come up to the standard that Lupino deserves.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Blondes Beware"

JOHNNY ARTHUR, the small edition sized comedian, is the star of this one not any too crammed with ripe, hearty laughter, even though it has plenty of rough and tumble in its two reels. The star does not display that intimate flair for comedy that he once had. His performance, taken alone, shows him trying hard but rarely succeeding in injecting genuine comedy into his pantomime. Considerably propped up by a hard-working supporting cast, an industrious title writer and a speedy series of sequences, his latest effort might be termed "successful." But we are not very emphatic about it.

The much-abused institution of marriage is satirized in the first portion, which can boast a lively family spat. Arthur, as the disconsolate hubby, falls in with a friend who introduces him to a busy pair of females so that the four of 'em have a hilarious time among themselves until a detective puts in an appearance and spoils things.

Another sequence is added when the wife attends a masquerade ball and Arthur unwittingly pours into her ears a straight-from-the-heart opinion of his spouse. Of course, with the unmasking, he discovers his error, but takes several whacks for his blunder.

A fair laugh number.

"Hop Off"

Count on Charley Bowers for novelty and ingenuity. His comedies are so ingenious, in fact, that one can only vaguely conjecture on his far-famed process which permits him to do things which at first thought would seem impossible. In his last few Educational subjects he has made oysters and roaches do the strangest and most unforseen things. Novelty—novelty—novelty—that's Charley Bowers.

Even the most jaded fan will wonder at the strange happenings of Charley's latest. For in it two trained fleas are the principal performers. They are Charley's flea circus and, incidentally, his bread and butter. If you were to hear the mystifying things they do you may perhaps think that we had no control of our typewriter and had let it run daffy. There can be no argument but that Mr. Bower's mystifying tricks are about the best the screen offers.

So, Mr. Exhibitor, if you are in search for something "different," something out of the common rut of comedies, something that will arouse wondering comment among your fans, then this Bower's number is just what you are looking for. One of the funniest gags that we have seen in pictures lately is the scene of the two trained fleas on roller skates using a man's bald head as a rink.

Directed by H. L. Muller, the comedy includes in its supporting cast: Ivonne Howell, Robert Graves and Dan Mason. Jay Turner

"Pictorial Tidbits"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS new Hodge-Podge follows the general trend of the series and offers a diversified group of interesting subjects—scenics and the like—throughout which is interspersed Archie N. Griffith's animation of the "some sense and nonsense" kind.

Among the items offered are shots of tarpon fishing in Atlantic, canal locks, natives of northern India, a floating home in China, the falls of Iguazu in South America.

Robert E. Gillaum conceived and edited the subject; his selections indicate a nicety of judgment. The Iguazu waterfalls are, in particular, worthy of mention.

A fairly entertaining "tidbit" for the majority of programs.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Felix the Cat in In and Out Laws"

(Educational—One Reel)

A FAIR Felix cartoon and one considerably below the high standard maintained by the Sullivan Studio in the past. In most of these black and white creations (chapters in biography of a famous cat) the gags have had sparkling originality and nimble imagination. But in this one so high a level is not reached. The snap and verve which we have always associated with Felix seems to be strangely missing in this subject.

Briefly its tale concerns Felix discovering a fighting bird and bringing him down to Mexico, where he defeats the champion bird scrapper of the land, thus making the cat well to do.

Fair program filler.—RAYMOND GANLY.

A great many Florida cities have Sunday movies but very few permit professional base ball as the blue laws of the State mention this form of amusement. However, the "blue laws" are not generally enforced and it was through this fact that the jury took but five minutes to bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

THE deed of transfer filed in the Cumberland County Courthouse at Carlisle, on June 6, showed that $115,000 was the purchase price paid for the Strand Theatre, that city, which recently was bought from the Cumberland Valley Amusement Company, controlled by Robert A. Steele, of Carlisle, by the Mecco Realty Company which is controlled by the Comerford chain of theatres, with headquarters in Scranton. The transfer became effective June 1, and during the summer about $10,000 will be expended in improving the interior. New flooring and probably new seats will be installed, and steel girders will replace the iron posts that sustain the balcony. The improvement will be completed by September 1.

The management of the Strand Theatre, Shenandoah, materially boosted the number of its patrons during the week of June 11, by showing exclusive locally made movies of the annual Schuylkill County high school's track and field meet, held June 2 on the Schuylkill fair grounds. The pictures were especially interesting to Shenandoah because girls from that city won the big prize for the J. W. Cooper high school.

Inquiries and Comments

Storage Batteries and Their Care

A PROJECTIONIST in Southern Illinois recently wrote to us stating that he was responsible for the care and operation of a bank of storage batteries placed in his theatre in connection with an emergency lighting outfit.

Not being overly familiar with such devices he requested information as to their general construction and operation in order that he be able to give them intelligent attention and assure their satisfactory performance.

This we promised to do.

The storage battery derives its name from the fact that it stores chemical energy which, at some future time, can be changed into electrical energy. A storage battery, contrary to popular belief, does not store electricity. The only device which, in any sense of the word, can be said to do this is a condenser. So remember, that it is chemical energy and not electricity that is stored. The electrical energy which results from the chemical action of the storage battery is, in itself, useless and must be, in turn, converted into mechanical energy before it can be of any use.

Another name for the storage battery is secondary cell. As distinguished from the primary cell, which actually generates electricity, the storage battery receives new energy, not from the renewal of its plates and electrolyte (chemical) but rather from the reversal of the chemical action when electricity is applied to its terminals. It is this reversible action of the chemical which makes the storage battery possible.

Types of Batteries

There are, in general, two types of storage batteries: the lead plate cell and the Edison cell. Both, of course, depend upon chemical action for their operation but the cells themselves are materially different, both as to construction and method of operation.

If a plate of pure lead and one of lead oxide are placed in a jar containing a solution of sulphuric acid and water (to weaken it) the lead oxide plate will be found to have a higher potential than the lead plate, meaning that the first will be plus and the second minus. The action is as follows:

Sulphuric acid + lead = lead sulphate + hydrogen gas.

The hydrogen carries a negative charge of electricity to the lead oxide plate which it changes to another form of lead oxide (lead monoxide).

Hydrogen gas + lead peroxide = lead monoxide + water.

The sulphuric acid changes this lead monoxide to lead sulphate which remains on the plate.

Sulphuric acid + lead monoxide = lead sulphate + water.

The entire operation can be expressed in one equation as follows:

Sulphuric acid + pure lead + lead peroxide = lead sulphate + water.

In other words, this means that, during dicharge, acid is taken away from the electrolyte (solution) whereas water is added to it so the specific gravity (density of the electrolyte is decreased. Both plates, on the other hand are changed to lead sulphate.

If the cell is now charged by applying current to it, this action is reversed and sulphuric acid is added to the electrolyte, water is taken from it; thereby increasing the specific gravity. The plates are returned to original condition.

The specific gravity is a sure means of telling when a battery is charged or discharged and is usually expressed as a whole number instead of the fraction which it really is. The weight of a certain quantity of water is taken as one. The weight of an equal volume of sulphuric acid, divided by one, will then be the specific gravity of the acid. In the case of cells for automobile service it ranges between 1.28 (1280) when the cell is charged, to 11.75 (1175) when the cell is discharged.

The voltage sometimes gives an indication as to the condition of the cell but this is often misleading. The voltage when the cell is fully charged is approximately 2.0 volts and when discharged it drops gradually to 1.7 volts. Any desired voltage may be obtained by connecting in series the proper number of cells.

The principal disadvantage of lead cells is that extreme care must be taken to see that they are not left discharged for a long time, and must not be overcharged or overdischarged. They require care in handling and are usually placed in sand filled trays so that the acid dripping from the jars will not cause damage due to burning action.

The Edison Battery

Another type of cell which is more rugged and requires less care is that known as the alkali or Edison Battery. If a plate of pure iron and another of nickel oxide are placed in a solution of potassium hydroxide (caustic potash) the result is a battery with the nickel oxide plate + and the iron plate —.

The action is as follows: when current flows through the battery, the nickel oxide changes to another oxide, having less oxygen and the iron is oxidized (oxygen is added) to form iron oxide.

Iron rust is iron oxide and is formed when the iron is wet, taking oxygen from the water to form the iron oxide which appears as rust. The heavy reddish-brown mud, usually found in swamps is still another form of iron oxide. The above action condensed is:

Nickel oxide + iron = another kind of nickel oxide + iron oxide.

The oxygen from the original nickel oxide is merely transferred to the iron. If current is now applied to the cell the action reverses:

Nickel oxide + iron oxide = original nickel oxide + pure iron.

The nickel oxide, or positive plate, is built up of small steel tubes packed with layers of first, nickel hydroxide and flaked metallic nickel. The hydroxide is later changed to nickel oxide. The flaked nickel is added to better conduct the electricity.

The iron, or negative plate is composed of a nickel plated steel grid containing small pockets filled with powdered iron oxide.

The plates are then assembled in two groups, the positive plates being all connected together and the negative plates likewise. As in the case of the lead battery there is always one more negative plate than positive. The two groups are then sandwiched together and are placed in a tank of cold rolled steel having welded joints. It cannot be opened for repairs and must be returned to the factory should such be necessary.

The Edison battery is lighter than the lead plate type and can be left discharged without damage resulting to the plates. Due to its construction, it can also withstand very rough handling. Its principal disadvantages are its higher cost and lower voltage. The voltage per cell is about 1.25 volts when fully charged. This, of course, necessitates the use of a larger number of cells to obtain a required voltage for operation.

New Theatre Under Way At Marion, N. C.

E. J. House, owner and manager of the Oasis Theatre, Marion, N. C., who, a short time ago was reported as planning to erect a theatre on the outskirts of the city, in what is known as the mill section, now announces that he has organized a stock company, in which he will hold the controlling interest, which will build a thoroughly modern theatre in the heart of Marion.

The plans which are now being prepared, Mr. House states, call for a seating capacity of 720, with sufficient height to the building to permit the installation of a comfortably sized gallery, should one be needed later.

New Philadelphia De Luxe House Under Way by Shapiro

WHAT will be among the largest and finest de luxe theatres devoted to the showing of photoplays and presentations in Philadelphia, is now under construction. It will be known as the "Uptown" and will be located on Broad Street above Susquehanna Avenue. It is being erected for Samuel Shapiro well known in building and theatrical circles. In addition to the theatre there will be a six story office building. The frontage will be 110 feet with a depth of 180 feet. Magaziner, Eberhardt, and Harris, are the architects. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and in addition to the orchestra floor will have a balcony and promenade. The site for the new theatre is considered an ideal one in building and theatrical circles as it will be at an entrance to the new North Broad Street subway and two squares below the proposed $3,000,000 Reading Railway Station.

The theatre will be of the modernistic art in its architecture, furnishings and appointment. The architectural style will be adopted for the exterior of the building as well as for the interior of the theatre. The theatre and office building will be modern and fire-proof in every respect. Every facility for the comfort and accommodation for the patron has been given utmost consideration. In addition to the theatre building the project will include modern stores and located about will be modern offices, which in size, abundance of day-light and appointment, will be ideal for commercial and professional purposes. The theatre will be the last word in modern appointments, including heating, ventilating and air-cooling systems, special electrical effects, etc.

In addition to the "Uptown," Shapiro built the Felton and Ogontz Theatres, both of which are considered among the finest of Philadelphia's neighborhood houses. These are operated by Stanley Company in conjunction with Shapiro.

Lets Contract for New Oil City, Pa., House

The contract was let on June 5 for the erection of a new theatre, to be known as the Latonia, at East First Street and Central Avenue, Oil City, Pa. The structure will cost $250,000 and ground was broken at once for the foundations by L. O. Bouquin who obtained the whole contract.

The entire building, with the exception of two small first floor stores, will be devoted to the theatre. The structure is designed in many respects along the lines of the new Stanley theatre in Pittsburgh. Marks & Kann, Pittsburgh, are the architects. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,584. It will be equipped both for picture and vaudeville programs, and the stage will be large enough to accommodate large road shows. The exterior is to be in polychrome terra cotta, brilliant in color and artistic in design.

Virginia Bradford

Virginia Bradford, now playing the ingenue in "Craig's Wife," has been the leading girl in a number of Pathe-De Mille presentations, including "Chicago," "The Country Doctor" and "The Wreck of the Hesperus." This Memphis lass originally came to Hollywood to write up the glamorous movie city for a press syndicate, but soon succumbed to the lure of acting.

Mr. Tully

Jim Tully, author of "Beggars of Life," which Paramount is filming, has returned to Hollywood after a stay in New York of two weeks.

Late Finishing Date

Because many of the scenes are specially constructed exteriors, depicting Alsace-Lorraine during the late war and the early months of post-war, Samuel Goldwyn does not expect to have "The Awakening" completed before August first. Production was begun on May 7.

New Sennett Series

Three new series of two-reel comedies were started the other day at the Mack Sennett plant at Studio City, Cal.

The titles and stories for these three series have been selected and are as follows: "Handy Andy"—"Bungalow Scandal," "Dumb Waiter," "Bath Tub Mystery," "Night Watchman's Mistake," "Hold My Baby" and "Betty's Baggage"; "Tired Business Man"—"Pink Pajamas," "His Latest Excuse," "The Wrong Flat," "His Narrow Escape," "His Wife's Vacation" and "His New Stenographer"; "Dan the Taxi Man"—"In a Taxi," "Taxi Gossip," "Taxi Sweeties," "Taxi Flirts" and "In the Park."

In the "Handy Andy" series will be Johnny Burke, Ethel Grey Terry and Vernon Dent. Harry Edwards directs. In the "Tired Business Man" series will be Billy Bevan, Natalie Joyce, Alice Ward, Irving Bacon and Barbara Pierce, Phil Whitman directing. In the "Dan the Taxi Man" series will be Jack Cooper, Virginia Vance and Bud Jamieson, Del Lord to direct.

The Paramount unit at work in Princeton, N. J., for the past two weeks has finished its location work at the university town, and is about to hike back to Hollywood. Charles Rogers heads the company of 12 which made the authentic scenes of this college picture. Various changes were made in the script in order to bring it into conformity with Princeton life. The real collegiate atmosphere will be injected into the film, it is expected, as both the director and scenarist are college graduates. All scenes were played by Princeton undergraduates. The picture will be released in the Fall. "Sophomores," its present title, is for working purposes.

New Pathe Productions

Pathe is now preparing "Show Folks," "Captain Swagger" and "Sal of Singapore" for early production at De Mille. Phyllis Haver will be the stella player in the last of this trio. With "Celebrity," "Annapolis" and "Craig's Wife" in filming, the above three make six Pathe pictures on which the studio is already active and on which it will be busy for another month.

Pathe is planning "The Spieler" as a co-featuring and elaborate special of carnival life for Alan Hale and Jacqueline Logan. Mr. Hale will continue to blossom forth as a comedian, at which task he has given a considerable bent of late. But before entering into his "Spieler" role, Hale will play Captain Whalen of a Malay steam freighter in the Haver vehicle. This part will not be comic, but dramatic.

"Interference"

Lothar Mendes, who directed "A Night of Mystery," will handle Paramount's production of "Interference," originally announced as "A Crime of Interference." In this opus Clive Brook, Evelyn Brent and William Powell will be featured.

On Location

Among the companies away from Hollywood filming on location sites are two from the Paramount studio and one from that of Warner Bros. Jack Holt, Director F. Richard Jones and a company of 75 have departed for the Segi Canyon and Monumental Valley to film desert sequences for "The Water Hole," a Zane Grey-Paramount western. At Jacumba Hot Springs near the Mexican border are the 75 members of the Paramount unit taking railroad scenes for "Beggars of Life." The entire Warner Bros. company making "The Midnight Taxi" have been taken by Director John Adolfi to a desolate region in Mexico, where they will live aboard a special train consisting of two Pullmans, a diner and a baggage car.

Modistes at T.-S. Studio

Tiffany-Stahl believes that "Clothes Make the Woman," and have engaged the services of six expert dress makers for the making of gowns for their various stars who are to appear in forthcoming productions. This department is to be presided over by Madame Alphreda, who was connected with the Bon Marche of Paris for many years. Clothes, it is estimated, play an important part in a production nowadays, appealing as they do to more than 65 per cent of women and girls who attend theatres.

Deserts Comedy

Frank Capra will temporarily forsake the comedy field to direct "The Way of the Strong," a melodrama of the underworld, for Columbia. The feature will be the director's fourth for this company, to which he is under long-term contract.

Young Eddie Quillan

Eddie Quillan, who, with Alice Day, acted the roles of country hicks in Mack Sennett comedies, ought to have a big year this season—at least, Cecil B. De Mille has plans in mind for his future.

Recently he engaged young Eddie for a part in "The Godless Girl" and following his work in that picture he signed him to a contract which will keep him in the De Mille ranks for the next four years. According to William Sistrom he will be nursed along in featured roles as the first step in the campaign to develop him for stardom. "Show Folks" will mark his debut under the new contract. Jack Jungmeyer has been signed to prepare the continuity and treatment.

Wampas Studio Night

The Wampas held its regular meeting at the Lasky studios on June 11. Arch Reeve was chairman and had as guests George Bancroft, William Roland, Andy Rice, Buddy Cooper, Karl Brown, James Hall, Fred Beetson and others. The Wampas boys plan a series of studio nights of which this was the second.

New Fox Building Dedicated

Dedication ceremonies for the new writers and directors building on the Fox lot were held last Wednesday. About 200 fan magazine and newspaper correspondents attended. The speakers included Sol Wurtzel, Mary Astor, Charles Francis Coe and Malcolm Stuart Boylan. Boylan acted as master of ceremonies.

YOUR WHOLE SHOW IN SOUND

Paramount Pictures 1928-9

Features, Paramount News, One- and Two-Reel Novelties, Stage Presentations, etc.

A history-making statement by

Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation

PARAMOUNT ANNOUNCES THE COMING OF QUALITY SOUND PICTURES

Backed by the one and only Paramount guarantee of perfection, not only in feature productions but in every other branch of screen and stage presentation as well. ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

Paramount's plans for sound and synchronization in all phases including talking pictures, nearing completion.

This company's Hollywood studios are fully equipped with sound devices. Our splendid production organization has many Paramount sound pictures actively in work.

Paramount's Long Island studio has been reopened and is rapidly being made ready, under a large staff of engineers and technical experts, for the production of those sound pictures which can be most advantageously filmed in the East. Located only a few minutes from Broadway, center of the world's finest speaking, dancing and singing talent, this studio offers Paramount facilities for production in sound that no other company possesses. ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

25 OR MORE PARAMOUNT FEATURE PICTURES IN SOUND

Paramount will produce and release during the 1928-9 season between 25 and 30 feature productions in sound. These will be the cream of Paramount's new product synchronized with music score and the most advanced and complete sound effects, most of them with talking sequences. They include:

"WINGS"

No need to review its amazing success as a road show. Now coming to picture houses with the same tremendous sound presentation that has enthralled $2 audiences. See and hear it for yourself! Hear the thrilling drone of the propellers and the zooming of the 'planes. Hear the stabbing rat-tat-tat of the machine guns as they spit death from Allied and German cockpits. The explosion of the bombs; destruction of balloons. Sound at its most startling best! A William Wellman production. With the screen's most popular girl, Clara Bow. The great coming star, Charles Rogers. Richard Arlen, Gary Cooper and others. ✢ ✢ ✢

"THE WEDDING MARCH"

Erich von Stroheim's gorgeous masterpiece. Even without sound it would be one of the finest money pictures ever produced by Paramount. With sound—with the wedding music, bells and ceremonial trumpetings in the world's most luxurious cathedral—with its heart-throbbing scenes heard as well as seen—it is incomparable! Not to speak of its dazzling Technicolor sequences and its mighty cast, which includes von Stroheim himself and adorable Fay Wray.

"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE"

Anne Nichols' great piece of screen entertainment. Soon to go to picture theatres. Synchronized with one of the finest music scores ever written, plus other thrilling sound effects. In addition to the best performance of Jean Hersholt's career, and Hersholt talking in many scenes, you hear Charles Rogers and Nancy Carroll, musical comedy star, singing the lovely theme songs of the play. Directed by Victor Fleming. ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

WHOLE SHOW IN SOUND

"THE PATRIOT"

Ernst Lubitsch's wonder-picture starring Emil Jannings. With Florence Vidor, Lewis Stone and Neil Hamilton. By far the greatest work of Lubitsch. By far the outstanding role for Jannings. Hear the wild, thunderous Russian marches. Hear the charge of the yelling Cossack riders as they terrorize the streets of Moscow. Hear the pistol shots—and see the innocents mowed down at the whim of a mad but fascinating Czar. Hear the incomparable Jannings and others in the cast talking in the climatic scenes! ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

"THE CANARY MURDER CASE"

Famous detective mystery-melodrama that sold over 200,000 copies as a novel. One hundred times more gripping as a Paramount picture in sound! With William Powell (as the famous "Philo Vance"), Louise Brooks, Ruth Taylor, James Hall and others featured in the real all-star Paramount cast. Directed by Malcolm St. Clair. Mystery is the vogue of the hour. Paramount, as usual, first with the season's greatest mystery picture, enhanced by sound and music. With sensational talking sequences. ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

"LOVES OF AN ACTRESS"

A gorgeous special starring Pola Negri and directed by Rowland V. Lee, who made "Barbed Wire". With Nils Asther and all-star cast. A spectacular love story of the Parisian stage and boulevards. With music score and sound effects. ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

"WARMING UP"

Starring Richard Dix in his most important picture in years. A lavishly produced comedy-drama of love, laughs and Big League Baseball. For the first time, a crucial World's Series game on the screen, in sound. At the most critical moment of the game, with Dix's career and love depending on fanning the batter, you hear the umpire shout, "Strike One!", "Ball One!", "Ball Two!", "Ball Three!", "Strike Two!" and then—! The swish of the ball; the crack of the bat. Fred Newmeyer production. With the new find, beautiful Jean Arthur, as the girl. ✢ ✢

Just a few of the new Paramount Quality Sound Pictures in work! There will be a total of 25 to 30 productions in the 1928-9 program filmed in sound with the same showmanship and care. Watch for further announcements!

PARAMOUNT NEWS IN SOUND

The industry knows how Paramount News, in one short year, has leaped into unquestioned leadership of the news reel field. Now comes its next mighty development! Paramount News will soon rise to even greater heights as a box office attraction by presenting a large portion of its service in sound. ¶ World events, epic-making happenings, scoops, special stunts, as only Paramount News can give them to you—heard as well as seen! The world's greatest news reel—on the screen in sound! ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢ ✢

For Doubting Thomases
When Universal announced a few weeks ago that 26 of the pictures scheduled for the year were completed and ready for showing, the Doubting Thomases remarked that even if Universal did have these 26, they probably weren't any good.
Universal has made its answer, and a most convincing one. For three weeks straight, Broadway is to have three Universal pictures showing simultaneously.
Three in a row to appear at the Roxy. The Capitol takes one, and the Rivoli takes one, and the Rialto and the Hippodrome.
Nice representation in competitive theatres. It talks well for the kind of pictures that Universal has ready for the year.

WILLIAM BOYD

The Idol of

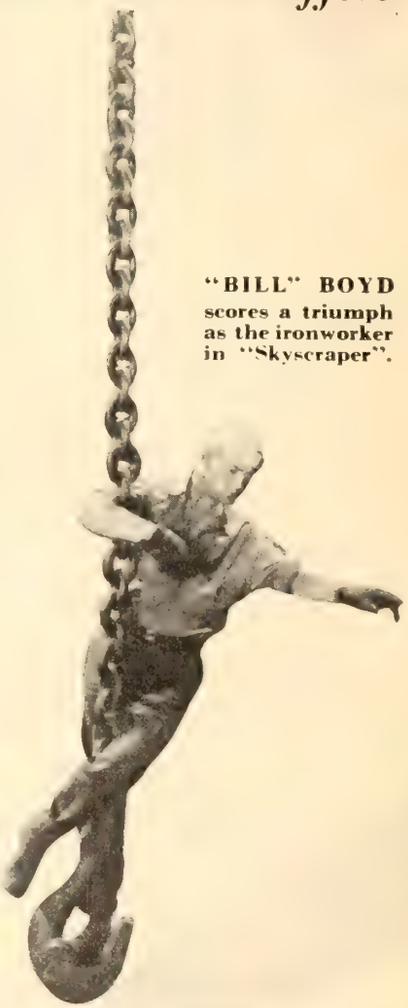
Bill Boyd has struck a note on the popularity scale that is music to the box-office.



BIG, he-man, human roles, that's Bill's meat. Bill gets his clothes soiled, his hands and face greasy—looks licked, sometimes—but they love him out front. Boyd typifies the worker, labor, industry, progress, as does no other star, and that's one mighty good reason why his acting and personality tug at the heart of Americans, builders.

Boyd is a sure bet today—and he's gaining new legions of friends. They'd walk a mile to see Bill smile.

Keep your eye on this Pathe star for the new season—watch him as the rookie cop, the hard-boiled leatherneck, the telephone linesman, the construction worker, the aviation mechanic. You'll be sitting pretty for a clean-up if you book the new product with Boyd in these two-fisted roles.

Boyd achieved new heights of popularity in "Dress Parade".

"BILL" BOYD scores a triumph as the ironworker in "Skyscraper".

Rumors to the contrary notwithstanding—

1. RCA Photophone is in quantity production. All the facilities of the manufacturing plants of RCA, General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company are being worked day and night to meet the nation-wide demand for this revolutionary sound reproducing apparatus.

   As a result of the vast manufacturing facilities of these great organizations, millions of dollars worth of Photophone equipment will be delivered during the remainder of 1928.

2. Plans have been perfected whereby there will soon be a plentiful supply of synchronized and other type sound pictures made by the Photophone process.

3. The question of the interchangeability of sound films made by the Photophone process with those made by other processes of sound recording on film, is *settled.

   RCA Photophone films can be run on existing licensed sound picture machines with perfect satisfaction, and reciprocally, films made by other than the Photophone process can be reproduced on Photophone machines with the utmost effectiveness. The only change required on either Photophone or other like machines to play sound films interchangeably, is in the aperture plate which requires but a few seconds to carry out.

The unparalleled tone quality of RCA Photophone apparatus is the sensation of the industry.

Sound Movie Tidal Wave; Showman Power; and Other Topics

By William A. Johnston

FROM the inception of the sound movie tidal wave, we have felt that the important point was the interchangeability of records and films over the various devices; and we have tried hard to get from the companies a clear statement for the exhibitor.

It would certainly seem that the man who installs a machine should know pretty clearly what he can expect to run through it.

The RCA Photophone comes forth this week with an advertising announcement on this all-important matter which is certainly definite. The exhibitor will note it with interest.

THAINS AND PROSPERITY.—" 'Con-IME TO WAKE UP.—Some time ago movie knocked the road show business into a cocked hat; and the interview was included in an article by the writer in a national publication.

The salient points made by Mr. Zukor are brought back to the writer's mind by the following letter from C. C. Burr of B & H Enterprises:

"For a long time I have been talking along the line of Adolph Zukor's interview on the necessity of trade advertising. If there are any additional points he wants brought out I would do anything I could to help this idea along. I thoroughly believe that for the good of the whole industry there must be a strong revival of trade advertising. We have got to work up some general campaigns or the legitimate stock companies—which are springing up in abandoned picture houses in all parts of the country—will blast all the pictures out of the picture theatres, and we won't have any theatres left to use our nice new 'talkie' invention in. The methods I used in the early days when I was controlling the destiny, in at least an advertising way, at Paramount, can be; in fact, must be used again. We knocked all sorts of legitimates out of the theatres in those days and when we got to building nice new theatres for pictures we forgot, or most of us did at least, how it was done. In fact, I guess there were only a few people who ever knew. Anyway, there is work to be done for the good of the business and before the bankers get the remaining few dollars of the picture business and then run off to play golf and laugh. Unless the whole picture crowd wakes up pretty fast, this is what is going to happen!"

There seems little to add to Mr. Burr's statement except this: that the bankers know nothing about the show business nor the supreme place of advertising in it. But apparently they do know something about advertising as a money making force in the general business world. Not long ago they delivered an ultimatum to the rice industry to the effect that unless the rice industry advertised its product adequately there would be no more loans. And the rice people promptly raised an appropriation of three million dollars.

How are the interested bankers to regard a film company that will not even advertise its product to the exhibitor? And how, we may also ask, is the exhibitor buyer to regard such a company?

CHAINS AND PROSPERITY.—" 'Consolidations formed to create marketable securities cannot increase prosperity,' said John R. Guernsey of the National Retail

Editorial By Willliam A. Johnston

Dry Goods Association the other day, in commenting on the trend toward forming chains of department stores. 'Ten stores,' he said, 'earning jointly a million dollars, are not going to earn any more just because they are consolidated. Probably they will earn less when the incentive of individual proprietorship is removed.

"'Department store chains will become formidable competition only when they develop a high type of management. That will come. So far, not a single chain of department stores has worked it out!'"

The above clear cut statement by Mr. Guernsey is applicable to the chain theatres with no change whatever except to add that theatres, even much more than stores, require the best incentive and attention of individual management.

The head of one of the best chains of theatres admitted to me recently that he could not, out of his headquarters city, run a theatre in a nearby city even though its population was remarkably similar in their picture requirements.

SHOWMAN POWER.—Speaking of reorganizations, mergers and what-not, it would seem that what the business lacks most, these days, is man power.

And when we say man power, we mean, of course, showman power.

For the power of men, in the business, is the power of showmen. It is showmanship that counts in the final analysis. A man may make a lot of mistakes but much may be forgiven him if only he provides importantly the entertainment that rings the box-office bell.

On the other hand he may be, by the standards of the counting house a most correct individual. But what will this avail him if he cannot make or sell successful entertainment?

The exhibitor sitting back and looking at New York through a long telescope rates the leaders of this business by the product he gets from them. They are as big as, and no bigger than, their show stuff and the way they handle it. He is interested in pictures.

The banker can only go so far in this business.

If, of course, a business gets leaking badly through the incompetency, irresponsibility or downright graft of those who run it, there's but one thing to do and that is to take the craft to port and rehaul her stem to stern, stop the leaks, heave over the unnecessary ballast and fit her to ride the water.

But, after that, it will take sailors to run the ship.

And so it takes showmen to run the show business.

And the wise and honest banker knows this.

I talked with one the other day, an investment banker of thirty years' successful experience. He made a specific statement, that he wouldn't touch a single stock where bankers ran the business.

* * * *

A BIT OF HISTORY.—Tom Meighan has evidently scored in "The Racket," his new picture, and while the congratulations are coming in we would like to add a "me too." Last Winter, Harold Franklin, Tom Meighan and the writer were at lunch at the Lambs. Meighan was considering the Broadway plays and we discussed them. The writer was enthusiastic for "The Racket," and, as a final argument, said: "Remember, I was with you here at the Lambs when George Loane Tucker and you decided to do 'The Miracle Man.'"

"That's a hunch," said Meighan. "It's 'The Racket.'"

* * * *

THE NEW DAY.—Harold Franklin says: "It is not enough to show sound motion pictures; theatres that devote themselves to sound synchronization must give to this new showmanship understanding and sympathy".

A quotation from an editorial written by this wise and expert showman for the West Coast magazine, "Now". His views are of great importance. We shall print them in full later.

Inside Slants on the Industry — PICTURES AND PEOPLE — The Mirrors of Filmdom

SOME very interesting angles on the condition of the-atre business as seen at first-hand were given us this week by S. J. McHenry, well-known Southern film man and now operating most profitably with a unique Western road show, which has some remarkable exploitation along with it.

His observations show most clearly that the alien operation of circuit houses is passing into the discard. The attempt of a head office to set in pictures where the local situations are unknown to the head office has definitely broken down.

In some instances, Mr. McHenry went into towns and played houses that had been closed up by circuits owing to lack of business, and did more at the box-office than some of the theatres that were still open.

This condition obtained in many parts of the country and was not confined to any one section.

The show which Mr. McHenry is giving is a distinct novelty, and this is the angle which he stresses in his observations. Pointing to "The Jazz Singer" as the prime thing that brought the sound movie revolution, he uses it also as proof that the public must have novelty.

There is no question in his mind that the public demands the sound picture. This is true in towns and cities of all sizes where the public has had a chance to see and hear the innovation.

IT is well at all times to listen to the voice of the public, for it is the public which decides. The newspapers are often the direct reflection of this all-important attitude. For example, Robert G. Tucker, photoplay editor of The Indianapolis Star, said recently:

"A musical presentation with a plot will be a further invasion of the legitimate theatre which the latter must be prepared to meet if it desires to continue close to the front of the procession. We are not sure whether the proprietors of the big motion picture theatres are meeting or creating a demand for something different.

"Within the past year there has been an increasing tendency to subordinate the picture to the stage show and it may as well be admitted that this change has proved popular.

"However it also may as well be conceded that the quality of the pictures—generally speaking is not as high as it was even a year ago. We do not expect the producers or their representatives to agree with this statement—and we are not seeking an argument or even a discussion.

"So far as we are concerned the number of excellent pictures compared to the total output has diminished noticeably. One of these days the producers may awaken to a realization that the permanency and prestige of the screen calls for better pictures even if the present cycle of colorful stage shows is to be continued."

WE are glad to call attention to a very worthy cause—the Jewish Consumptive Relief Home, located at Duarte, a suburb of Los Angeles, and in behalf of which the Coast film colony is enlisted.

A big benefit performance is being given June 30th at the Warner Theatre in Hollywood, with Al Jolson and Will Rogers as masters of ceremonies, and an array of talent from pictures, vaudeville and the stage participating.

Mrs. Marcus Loew has recently endowed a hospital building in memory of her late husband, and buildings have also been contributed and endowed by Mrs. Goldstone, mother of Phil Goldstone, chairman of the finance committee of the sanitarium, and others.

The chairman of the committee in charge of the benefit on the Coast is B. P. Schulberg; other members being Louis B. Mayer, B. P. Fineman, Joseph M. Schenck, M. C. Levee, Harry Rapf, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Sol Wurtzel, Jack White, E. M. Asher and C. King Charney.

This worthy institution is conducted without cost to the patients, and is one of the very few free tuberculosis sanitariums in the country. We understand that twenty per cent of the patients are from New York; and, it would seem appropriate if the industry here would endow and sustain a building, similar to those already contributed by groups in Chicago and other cities.

To this end, we suggest a big annual benefit show could be arranged in New York similar to the one being held in California this week.

THAT the talkies are taking the play away from most of the other picture houses is strongly in evidence through an analysis of the NEWS' Key City Report department for the past several weeks. In practically every city where sound picture equipment has been installed in a theatre that house is the one generally making the best showing for the week. It is particularly interesting to note that these pleasing returns are being made during the so-called slack season.

200 Sound Features Minimum For Coming Season

Announcements by Leading Companies Show Production Plans Shaping Up; Score, Effects and Dialogue Will Be Used

THE onward sweep of sound-in-pictures was clearly shown this week with the announcement by several leading companies of plans for synchronization of features for the new season.

This will take the form of synchronized scores, or effects, or dialogue, or all three.

Based upon these preliminary announcements, MOTION PICTURE NEWS estimates that not less than 200 of the 1928-9 feature productions will have sound in some form, and it is possible that this figure will be greatly increased, as theatre installations are made in growing numbers, and the sound movement gains momentum in production quarters.

Of announcements already made, Paramount heads the list with 25 to 30 features, as a minimum, to be synchronized, followed by Warner with 25 minimum, Fox with 22, Universal with 18, Pathe with 10, FBO with 6 and more to be determined, and United Artists with at least 4.

Details of the announcements made this week will be found in "The Voice of the Screen."

No word has yet come from First National or M-G-M as to the number of features that will get sound treatment, but it is a safe hazard that each company will have a considerable number.

Tiffany-Stahl announced this week that it would go in for sound on all features and short subjects. Columbia had previously made known its intention to synchronize, as has also Gotham. Sierra Pictures will use the disc method, and Ethlyn Gibson Co., a new concern on the Coast, will use sound in serials. The Buck Jones Corp. will have sound in the first Buck Jones special.

There will also be a large number of short subjects with sound. Hal Roach and the Christies have officially announced the signing of license agreements. Mack Sennett is on record as predicting that both color and sound will play big parts in future shorts.

In addition to the Paramount features, the Publix stage unit shows will be synchronized.

European Film Cartel Reported

Move Against American Films Credited to Ufa and Luce Would Require Solid Front of European Concerns

THE report of a European film cartel against American pictures has created considerable interest in the industry as a result of a statement published in the New York Times credited to Ludwig Klitsch, managing director of Ufa. The report has it that the cartel is being effected by Ufa of Germany and Luce of Italy. The Klitsch statement is reported as follows:

"A European film cartel is actually established now. The German-Italian agreement was only an incidental step in a whole series of general European agreements. A number of leading film enterprises in important European film countries have joined to form a solid front against America in order to be able to negotiate on terms of equality with the greatest film factor in the world."

According to the Times report Paris film circles are completely mystified over the Klitsch statement. There seems to be doubt that such a cartel could effectively be organized. The same doubt exists in the minds of foreign managers of American film companies, who advance several reasons why such a move could not be successfully carried out.

The Klitsch statement undoubtedly was the outcome of cabled reports from Rome that Ufa had concluded a joint production agreement with the Institute Nazionale Luce. The latter is said to be a semi-official organization sponsored by Mussolini and has been making short subjects for some time.

In arguing against the likelihood of a European cartel, those familiar with conditions abroad declare it would hardly be possible, particularly with Ufa named as one of the chief instigators. With Paramount and Metro allied with Ufa in business deals, it seems unlikely, it is argued, that Ufa would be behind such a movement.

As another argument against the successful conclusion of a cartel it is pointed out that it would be possible only if the complete industry in Europe joined hands with the entire industry in Italy or France. Ufa is considerably removed from representing the entire industry in Germany. A solid front is necessary in the organizing forces in each country and these several units must be in absolute accord and in control of the industry in the various countries.

It is pointed out that to perfect such an organization the combined forces would be put to an enormous expense first in the building of such an organization and then in the financing of studios.

Ufa, according to the report, however, has promised Premier Mussolini that they will rehabilitate Italian film studios and supply technical staffs for the revival of Italian film production.

According to the U. S. Department of Commerce, the Institute Luce has signed agreements with various European countries for cooperation in educational and instructional films, and announced some time ago their desire to collaborate with Ufa in educational film matters.

Spanish Producers Ask Government Protection

Government protection of the Spanish motion picture industry has been asked by Spanish film producers, according to a cable to the Department of Commerce in Washington last week from Trade Commissioner George R. Canty at Paris.

The producers are reported to have requested the inauguration of a quota regime, similar to that in France, to be operated in either of two ways. The first proposal is that exhibitors show five Spanish feature films for every 100 exhibited. The second suggestion is that one Spanish feature film be purchased for exhibition abroad for every 25 features imported.

Al Boyd Building New Theatre Chain; Already Includes 12 Houses

IN connection with an announcement that Al Boyd, who resigned recently as managing director of the Stanley Theatre Corporation, of Philadelphia, has taken a lease on the Pergola theatre, Allentown, Pa., for a period of five years; the Allentown newspapers state the Pergola is to be a part of a new chain of theatres he is creating, and which already includes twelve houses, another of which is the $750,000 Boyd theatre for which he broke ground on June 11, at 19th and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. Mr. Boyd was the man in control of buying all film for the big Stanley chain, prior to his leaving that organization for the purpose of promoting his own project.

Mr. Boyd will take over the Pergola, which seats 1,000, on July 1. It is a comparatively new house, owned by James K. Bowen, of Allentown, and it is announced that the present manager, D. E. Knorr, will be retained as local manager.

Sunday Movies Gaining in Popularity

Reports from Various Contested Centers Reveal Victories for Opponents of Blue Laws

SUNDAY motion pictures seem to be winning popular favor in many localities where battles have been waged for and against the picture houses. In nearly every instance where a report has been received the last week it has announced favorable action toward Sunday shows or juries disagreed as to whether or not they should be permitted.

The fight in the Province of Quebec over the question of Sunday shows took a sensational turn when the United Amusements, Limited, Montreal, scored a legal victory over the Quebec Provincial Government by securing a writ from Mr. Justice Coderre, of the Superior Court at Montreal, on June 1 prohibiting criminal proceedings against the Regent Theatre for operating on Sundays. The Regent is one of 12 Montreal theatres operated by United Amusements, and it was one house which had been named in the test cases instituted by Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Premier of Quebec.

The writ is tantamount to a court injunction, and it halts criminal action against the theatre because of Sunday shows. In the petition for the writ it was stated that United Amusements, Limited, being a corporation, could not be prosecuted on a criminal charge. It was also claimed that presentations of moving pictures did not constitute a theatrical performance in the eyes of the law. The Provincial statutes contained no prohibition of moving picture shows on Sundays. The Provincial law banned theatrical performances but said nothing about moving pictures. Moving picture presentations had been permitted in the Province of Quebec on Sundays since February 28, 1927, under existing laws. The Federal statutes invoked by the Quebec Provincial Government did not make a crime of Sunday shows.

For these reasons the corporation asked that a writ of prohibition be issued to enjoin the judges of the criminal courts from proceeding with the test actions. The writ was ordered issued by the Superior Court judge, and it was served on Judge Marin, of the Court of Sessions and High Constable Cinq-Mars, sheriff of Montreal, who presented the summons to the theatre company. Presecution of the company has, therefore, been halted and Sunday shows are being held as usual.

In all probability, motion pictures will now be shown in Marion, O., on Sundays without any interference. Ed. Reynard, arrested and twice arraigned before a jury for keeping his theatre open on Sunday, has again been released through a jury disagreement. In April the jury that heard the case disagreed. A new jury was called. Last Monday this second jury also disagreed. So, unless some unforeseen event occurs, Reynard will continue to operate on Sunday.

The promised closing of all businesses, except restaurants and prescription counters, on Sundays in Eustis, Fla., to take effect Sunday, May 27th, was a dud, and everything is going along "as usual" in that hustling little city.

The Ministers association of the city filed a protest against the operation of the motion picture theatre on Sunday. As the ordinances prohibited practically all activity on Sunday, Chief of Police W. J. Davis issued an order for the closing of every business, with the two exceptions mentioned.

This order caused such a storm of protest that the city council got together in special session and passed a new ordinance lessening the restrictions imposed by the old law. The new ordinance excepts drug stores, hotels, filling stations, theatres, motion picture shows, cold drink and barbecue stands, bathing houses, beaches and golf courses, all "during such hours and subject to such restrictions as may from time to time be designated and prescribed by the mayor."

Traer, Iowa, voted on Sunday shows on May 23, following a hot contest in which 306 voted for the Sunday amusement opposed by 272. The majority of 34 for the theatres was considered a decisive victory since the churches and also the city council had offered strong opposition to the citizens' decision.

Sennett Plans 10 Color Comedies for Pathe

TEN comedies in Technicolor are planned by Mack Sennett for release through Pathe. They will be two reels each. The producer also intends to screen another feature and is now preparing the story. He will leave New York for the coast shortly after a business conference. He is considering a license for the production of sound pictures.

Colorado Exhibitor Wins Right of Sunday Shows

Hobart Kincaid, manager of the Rialto Theatre, of Florence, Colo., won his skirmish with the state authorities over the right to operate Sunday movies in Florence. An information was recently filed against Mr. Kincaid in the district court of Canon City, Colo., charging Mr. Kincaid with violation of a state law prohibiting Sunday entertainment. Upon motion by Mr. Kincaid's attorney, Sperry Packard, of Pueblo, the information was dismissed by District Judge James L. Cooper before whom the case was called.

The effect of the ruling was that the law did not apply to motion picture entertainment. Thirty days was given district attorney Delbert Hessick to appeal from the decision although it is believed this action will not be taken.

Theatre Manager Credited as Strike Pacifier

Pottsville newspapers give credit to Samuel Friedman, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Pottsville, Pennsylvania, for having brought about an adjustment of a local trolley strike that had been progressing for 21 weeks. Acting independently after a citizens' committee had failed to end the disagreement, Mr. Friedman is given credit for bringing the opposing forces to a satisfactory settlement.

G. Siegmann, Veteran Screen Actor, Passes

GEORGE SIEGMANN, well known character actor in moving pictures, died at his home in North Martel avenue, Hollywood, last Friday, June 22, following a long illness. Death was due to pernicious anemia. He was 45 years old. A year ago he was married to Mrs. Maud Darby of Portland, Ore.

Beginning his stage career with Charles Frohman, he launched his screen activities in "Intolerance," "Birth of a Nation" and other Griffith films. Altogether he was in the films for 15 years. He appeared in "The Connecticut Yankee" for Fox and "The Three Musketeers" for United Artists. There followed other numerous roles for the actor, most of them in a heavy vein. Siegman acted in Universal pictures during the past two years. He first appeared under this company's banner in "The Merry Go Round" and was later seen in two of the Laemmle specials, in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "The Man Who Laughs."

Loew's Theatre Montreal, Robbed of $2,240

Loew's Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, was the scene of a daring hold-up by a lone bandit on Sunday evening, June 17, when the gunman grabbed a cash box containing $2,240 from Arthur Bourassa, doorman, and Miss A. Chartier, cashier, as they were preparing to leave the box-office in the lobby. With great courage, Miss Chartier threw a second cash box back into the booth and locked herself inside, thus saving a large amount of cash. Bourassa shouted for help and grappled with the bandit, but the latter seized the box and made his getaway despite the crowd on the street. The theatre was packed at the time, but the audience was unaware of the robery. Two constables gave chase, but the robber ran through a nearby house to another street and was lost to view.

This was the second time in recent months that Loew's Theatre had been robbed.

Indian Cinema Commission Rejects Quota System

The Indian Cinema Commission has issued its report which, it is understood, rejects the quota system for that country and advocates a subsidy for private enterprises. The three European members, however, have issued a minority report disagreeing with their colleagues' proposals on these points. All the members declare that any Imperial or British preference is unnecessary; and, futhermore, advocate one central censorship instead of the existing provincial censorships.

B. W. Bickert of Saenger Theatres, Inc., Resigns

For the past eight years special representative and district manager with the Saenger Theatres, Inc., B. W. (Bert) Bickert resigned that position on June 15.

His future plans indefinite, Mr. Bickert thinks he will enter the exhibition field again for himself.

No Anti-Movie Legislation

Last Session of Congress Left Bills in Committee; December Session to Consider Walsh, Brookhart Measures

NO legislation opposed to motion picture theatre interests passed at the last session of Congress. But substantial reductions were made in the Admission Tax, according to a report of the National Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America made by Chairman A. Julian Brylawski to President R. F. Woodhull and the Board of Directors.

Mr. Brylawski was in close touch with Congressional situations during the session. The Lankford Bill, which sought to close all Washington Theatres on Sunday with a view to extending that inhibition later to the entire nation, was held in committee. Another measure which provided for national censorship and a commission to control the motion picture business was also kept in committee.

Congress reduced the tax on theatres $17,000,000, which is considered a master stroke in view of the big reductions heretofore granted and the fact that taxes on other industries were retained.

The bill introduced by Senator Brookhart, which provided certain regulatory provisions for the motion picture business, and was the subject of much contention in the industry, is yet in committee. A move will be made to bring this to the attention of Congress again in December.

A Senate resolution providing for a general investigation of the motion picture business was introduced by Senator Walsh of Montana in the closing of the session. This also will be considered at the December meeting. Considerable assistance was rendered by the theatres through the efforts of the National Legislative Committee to the Mississippi Valley flood sufferers in helping through certain remedial legislation.

Special attention will be given the December session as several bills and resolutions affecting the motion picture industry are in committee and ready for Congressional consideration.

Conspiracy Charge Off?

Defense Counsel Expects Action Brought by Santa Cruze Exhibitor to Be Dropped

ACTION brought against Frank A. McAuley and Lewis R. Greenfield, Santa Cruze exhibitors and nine distributors by J. A. Harvey, Jr., alleging that exhibitors and distributors conspired to cut off his film service, is expected to be dropped on account of demurrers of the defendants being upheld by Judge Lucas, of the Superior Court, Santa Cruze, Calif. Nat Schmulowitz, counsel for the defense, is of the opinion that this will effect the dismissal of the complaint inasmuch as it failed to state a cause of action against the defendants. The court did not grant permission for amending the complaint.

The constitutionality of California's anti-trust law was attacked by Schmulowitz, under which the double damage $100,000 suit was brought. Among the distributors named in the complaint whom Harvey alleged had entered into a conspiracy to cut off his film service were First National, Fox, F B O, P. D. C., Universal, M-G-M, Warner Bros., Paramount and Educational. A separate answer, denying the charges, was filed by each of these companies.

Paramount, B & K Win Brief Delay in Marks Bros. Injunction Suit

PARAMOUNT, BALABAN & KATZ and twenty-five other defendants were granted two weeks postponement in Chicago in the injunction proceedings brought against them by Marks Bros., charging conspiracy and restraint of trade. The postponement was won in the Federal District Court before Judge Page last Friday, when affidavits were submitted that films were available to Marks Bros. Granada and Marbro theatres. The defending companies asked postponement until October, but this was denied, Marks Bros. contending that immediate relief was necessary and asserting that no films were available for showing at its house this week.

The suit was brought under the Clayton Act, supplementing the Sherman Act, and charged restraint of trade and discrimination. In first denying the request of the defendants for a lengthy postponement, the court adjourned the case until the afternoon, when arguments were to be heard.

Seeking to disprove Marks Bros. contention regarding inavailability of pictures, affidavits were made at the Balaban & Katz offices, following the morning session, by James R. Grainger, of Fox; Phil Reisman, Pathe's general sales manager, and Earl Silverman, of Warners, that pictures of those companies were available to Marks Bros. It was on these affidavits that the two weeks delay was granted.

Novel Tie-Up for Shorts

M-G-M and Loew Theatres Plan National "Our Gang" Movie Talent Contest; 25 Newspapers to Cooperate

A NATIONAL publicity tie-up for short subjects is the plan of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew Theatres. On July 2, it is their intention to begin a national selection contest for children aspiring to become members of "Our Gang," the Roach comedy unit. The contest will be concluded on August 4, and the children will be received over the period of four weeks. On each of six nights in the fifth week, all the young embryo stars for some one of the "Our Gang" roles will be assembled on the theatre stages to be chosen by popular choice. The winners will be assigned their particular role in a motion picture which will be made under the auspices of the local theatre.

The Roach studios have prepared a scenario to be used as the basis of the motion picture which will be produced at each of the theatres with the winners playing the leading roles, while the others will be used as extras. A director and cameraman will be assigned by Roach to each of the theatres for production purposes. Roach has offered as first prize a contract as a member of "Our Gang," a prize which includes all expenses of the winner selected and his parents to Culver City.

Eighty-nine theatres in 25 key cities will figure in the contest. Arrangements have been made with newspapers in each of the cities to carry each day details of the contest and entry blanks for the children.

The cities in which this contest will be conducted are: New York, Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Norfolk, Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis, Nashville, New Orleans, Houston, Evansville, Canton, Columbus, Cleveland, Toledo, Dayton, Indianapolis, Harrisburg, Reading, St. Louis, Kansas City, Syracuse, Boston and Toronto.

Trailers, stunts, lobby displays and programs in which "Our Gang" Comedies are featured will be employed by each of the theatres during the run of the contest. Each entrant for an "Our Gang" role will submit his entry blank accompanied by his or her photograph. Reproductions of leading canditates for honors will appear in the newspaper daily. Either the theatre audiences or a committee of judges to be selected locally will make the final selection of winners in each theatre.

Christie Starts Work

Four Comedy Companies in Full Swing on New Season's Product for Paramount's Releasing Schedule

WITH a brand new series just started and three other comedy groups working, the studios of the Christie Brothers on the coast have begun the production schedule to supply comedies for Paramount beginning early this August and continuing until July, 1929.

The new series, "The Confessions of a Chorus Girl," stars Frances Lee, one of the Christie bathing girls who has been progressing of late. This series will also include Billy Engle, Sid Smith and others. "Skating Home" is the title of the first of these comedies which William Holland is directing. The other two units, those of Billy Dooley and Bobby Vernon, are making "The Dizzy Diver" and "Stop Kidding," respectively. Dooley's comedy will employ a submarine set, and is being filmed by William Watson from a story by Hal Conklin. Vernon is being directed by Walter Graham. In his supporting cast are Jimmie Harrison, Billy Engle, and Ella MacKenzie.

Cleveland Protection Is Settled, Buying Ban Lifted

THE buying ban is off in Cleveland. Exhibitor members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association have been notified that the first run protection difficulties have been satisfactorily adjusted with the distributors and that, on June 25th, they would be released from their pledge not to buy new product. This announcement followed word from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stating that their first and second runs in Cleveland must play and clear their pictures in forty-two days, thus making their product available to first run neighborhood theatres on the forty-third day after release. Last season pictures were not available to first run neighborhood houses until the 57th day after release. The forty-three-day protection period was accepted as a compromise, the exhibitors having asked for 28 days. Educational, Tiffany-Stahl and Standard Film Service Company had previously granted the exhibitor protection request.

Line-Up Half Complete, Says Abe Stern

THE Stern Bros. comedy line-up of 52 comedies for 1928-29 is about half complete, according to Abe Stern vice-president and treasurer of the Stern Film Corporation, who has arrived in New York from the coast, where he has been for the past several months supervising production.

Twenty comedies in all are complete said the executive and most of them are already in the east ready for previews. The number represents about five two-reelers of each of the four series being produced by the Sterns. The four series are: "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," "Let George Do It," "Buster Brown" and "Mike and Ike."

Of the first "The Newlyweds Unwelcome," "The Newlyweds' Court Trouble," "The Newlyweds Lose Snookums," "The Newlyweds Need Help" and "The Newlyweds' Headache" are counted done. Of the second "Rubber Necks," "Look Pleasant," "The Cross Country Bunion Race," "All for Geraldene," "Sailor Suits" and "The Hat Salesman" are finished. Kenton is directing; "Father and Son," starring Noah Beery; "Through the Breakers," directed by Scott Dunlap; "Accusing Fingers," by Captain Ira Longworth, and "Circus Love," by Courtney Riley Cooper.

Barrett McCormick to act in the same capacity for Douglas Fairbanks. Louis Lusty, who handled exploitation on the New York run of "Ramona," has been engaged as assistant to Emil Jensen, sales manager for Art Cinema Corporation, one of the United Artists production units.

Reginald Denny has written a story for Buck Jones, a friend of the cowboy star. Jones, who established the Buck Jones Corporation this year, has leased studio space at Universal City and established production offices there.

The interior sets for his first independent productions, "The Big Hop," have been completed and the cameras began to click a week ago.

The Reginald Denny story will be second on the list of the Jones vehicles. It has no title as yet. Denny's picture, "That's My Daddy," was adapted from a story by himself.

The first of the two-reel productions have already been pre-viewed on the coast. Stars in these finished pictures include "Big Boy," Al St. John and Wallace Lupino. This latter comedy, a Tuexod, is Lupino's first solo featured role in two-reelers.

Kennedy Denies FBO Will Concentrate on Cheaper Grade of Pictures

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, president of F B O, emphatically denied this week the recently published report that F B O would concentrate on the production of a cheaper grade of pictures during 1928-9.

"We have written more first run business to date than ever before in the history of F B O and this is a striking tribute to the merit of our new productions. Our six Special Attractions, the Tom Mix series and the 24 Gold Bonds will all be pictures of the highest grade made for first run theatres. Sanity and practical showmanship are the watchwords of our studio and we are sparing no expense to give exhibitors the finest product ever made by F B O," said Mr. Kennedy.

N. Y. State Censorship Upheld by Court

Unanimous Decision of Appellate Division Sustains Ban Against Picture, "The Naked Truth"

NEW YORK STATE censorship of motion pictures was upheld by a unanimous decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, third department, on Friday, June 22, sustaining the ban against the exhibition of the picture "The Naked Truth." The decision is the first that has been handed down by a New York state court on the subject of censorship and ends the first litigation brought to challenge the jurisdiction of the motion picture division of the New York State Department of Education.

Four times reviewed and four times forbidden to be exhibited on the ground that it was indecent and obscene, "The Naked Truth," purported to show the effects of vice upon both men and women. Two so-called clinical reels accompanied the picture, one to be shown only to male audiences and the other intended solely for female audiences.

The Welfare Film Corporation, which produced the film, contended that the picture pointed out a moral and was also educational. It was cited that the picture had been licensed in Virginia, Maryland and Ohio, and had been shown throughout New Jersey and Chicago.

The opinion of the court was written by Justice Edward C. Whitmyre, who summed up the film controversy and gave the decision of the court in the following language:

"This action was a certiorari to review the determination of the state motion picture division in refusing to issue a license for the exhibition of the motion picture entitled "The Naked Truth." The picture traces the lives of three young men from boyhood to manhood and is intended to portray the danger and results of association with lewd women. It shows a male and female in the nude and among other things the progress of different diseases and effects.

"The petitioner claimed that it is educational and the defendants answer that it is obscene and indecent. Several applications and examination for license have been made and it was condemned for the reasons stated.

"The educational law of New York state provide that the director of motion pictures shall cause every motion picture film to be examined and issue licenses therefor, unless it, or a portion of the same, is obscene, indecent, immoral, sacriligious, or of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime. It is not alleged that the examining officials acted in bad faith. The determination of the motion picture director is confirmed."

Sells First Division Stock

Controlling Stock Owned by Jesse J. Goldburg Bought by Robert S. Furst; Distribution to Be Reorganized

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, having sold his 50 per cent interest in the company to Robert S. Furst, vice-president and treasurer, a change in the ownership of First Division Distributors, Inc., became effective June 25, with the resignation of Mr. Goldburg as president and director of the company, Mr. Furst succeeding him. Raymond Wells, vice president and production manager, arrived in New York during the week and announced that his company will continue in business. He will reorganize the distribution of the First Division program, and will remain in the east until he has completed the job. Upon finishing the reorganization, Mr. Wells will return to the Coast to resume production.

Mr. Furst, who now owns the controlling interest, is a retired steel man of the middle west. He had been interested in production with Mr. Wells before obtaining an interest in First Division last January.

Mr. Goldburg is enroute to California. He declares he has no immediate plans for the future, but has intimated that his activities will be confined to the production end of the industry.

Lloyd Considering New Idea for Next Comedy

FOR several months Harold Lloyd has been working on a new idea for the production which will follow "Speedy." While in the East recently, he had conferences with several of the foremost technicians in the "sound" field, and was introduced to two new developments along this line, which as yet are still studio secrets. These have been placed at the bespectacled comedian's disposal, and if it is found practicable to synchronize the type of comedy produced by Lloyd, his new picture will contain the latest developments in this field.

Lloyd has never discussed for public consumption the possibilities of "speakie" comedies. He has a splendid talking voice himself, developed through his long stage experience, which dates back to his first appearance in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" at the age of twelve.

His entire staff is now engaged in making "tests" and investigations of the newest ideas in sound and lighting, so that when he is all set to go on his successor to "Speedy" he will be right up to the minute with all technical devices.

Court Decides Theatre License Tax Illegal

The Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma in a decision handed down this week in Oklahoma City upheld the district court of Creek County in its decision that a license tax required of theatres in the city of Drumright was a revenue measure only and therefore illegal.

The Strand Amusement Company, operating two theatres in the city of Drumright, brought suit against the Mayor, chief of police and other city officials to enjoin them from enforcing an ordinance which required the payment of $100 annually as a license fee, payable quarterly in advance. Testimony was introduced, according to the Appellate Court, to show that since the ordinance was passed, it had been used solely as a revenue-producing measure and was contrary to the state law.

Sam Wood will direct.

First National Completes 2 New Productions

"Oh, Kay!" and "The Night Watch"—two new First National productions, have been completed at the Burbank studios of First National. A third one, "Waterfront," was started last week. Corinne Griffith has finished "The Divine Lady" and is now ready to start her new role in "Outcast." Meanwhile, cutting, assembling and titling will get under way on the completed vehicle. Billie Dove is also in readiness to begin her new role. "Waterfront," co-starring Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall, was started by William Seiter last week. The company is now on location in San Francisco where it will remain for three weeks. Richard Barthelmess has been working on "Out of the Ruins," which will have a new title, for a month.

In the cutting rooms at Burbank are: "The Butter and Egg Man," "The Head Man," "The Whip," "The Glorious Trail" and "Heart to Heart." Editing and titling is finished on "The Barker," "The Wright Idea" and Harry Langdon's new comedy, as yet untitled.

Fox Net Profits Large for First Quarter

FOX FILM CORPORATION and subsidiaries for the first quarter of 1928 report net profit of $1,363,561 after charges and taxes, equivalent to $1.78 a share earned on 767,216 combined shares of class A and class B stocks outstanding at the end of quarter. This compares with $806,983 or $1.61 a share on 500,000 shares of combined stocks in first quarter of last year. The increase for the first quarter of 1928 was partially due to the acquisition of Wesco Corporation. The full effect of the Wesco acquisition will not be realized until the last quarter of this year, Fox executives state.

Consolidated income account of Fox Films and subsidiaries for the quarter ended March 31, 1928, is as follows:

Profit after charges $1,451,842, Federal taxes $88,281, net profit $1,363,561, dividends on Class A and Class B stocks $767,207, surplus $596,354.

Balance sheet as of March 31, 1928, shows total assets of $56,438,811. Current assets were $19,676,601; including $3,775,116 cash, and current liabilities $4,187,087.

Holbrook Blinn, Stage and Screen Star, Dies

HOLBROOK BLINN, an important luminary in the American field of acting, prominent on both the stage and screen, died at his home at Croton-on-the-Hudson last Sunday evening, June 24th. A few days before he had been thrown from a horse with the result that an infection of the arm set in which caused circulation of his right lung to be cut off, thus bringing on his collapse. He left a wife and a sister. The funeral services were held at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the Trinity Episcopal Church in Ossining, with the Rev. Gilbert W. Harris officiating. Burial was at the Sleepy Hollow Cemetery.

A native of San Francisco, the actor made his debut at the age of six in 1878. He appeared in several motion pictures, his best screen contribution being in Mary Pickford's "Rosita." Also active as a director as well as actor, his screen activities date back to such early productions as "The Butterfly on the Wheel" and "Prima Donna's Husband." His last screen roles were in Paramount's "The Telephone Girl," First National's "The Masked Woman" and Associated Exhibitors "The Unfair Sex."

Sam Lears, St. Louis Film Man, Dead

Funeral services for Sam Lears, pioneer motion picture theatre operator and theatre equipment man, were held in St. Louis on Monday, June 25. He died suddenly June 23 in Chicago, where he had made his home for the past six years.

About six years ago he purchased a large interest in the Arlington Seating Company of Arlington Heights, near Chicago. Prior to going to Chicago he operated a theatre equipment house at Broadway and Market street, St. Louis.

Lears was a picturesque figure in the St. Louis political world at one time and was credited with being the "keyman" in the investigation of graft in the St. Louis Police Department in 1906.

Musicians Caused Closing U. A. House, Says Report

It is formally stated at the home office of West Coast Theatres that the closing of the United Artists Theatre, Seattle, was due to the insistence of the musicians' union that the theatre employ a minimum of 15 musicians, whereas the theatre could not afford more than eight. West Coast therefore deemed it less expensive to close the theatre down than to operate it under the circumstances, the statement reads.

News and Comment on All Phases of "Sound" Pictures

Paramount Announces Plans for Season

Talkie Highlights

PARAMOUNT officially announces a minimum of twenty-five to thirty features for the coming season with synchronization and many of them to have talking sequences. Sound will also be used in the short subjects.

Universal also tells of plans to synchronize at least eighteen features for the new season.

England is aroused to a high pitch of enthusiasm over sound pictures and a number of new devices are already making their appearance. It is claimed that this equipment will be installed at much lower prices than prevail in America.

Labor troubles reach a serious aspect in St. Louis over "canned music."

Negotiations are reported under way by which First National will be franchised by R C A Photophone.

Pathe has signed for the Photophone system of sound recording and reproducing and ten of the company's specials will be synchronized under that process.

J. D. Williams is negotiating with R C A Photophone and will in all likelihood handle that equipment in the United Kingdom.

Sound in the storm sequence of "The King of Kings" promises to make that one of the most remarkable pictures to date.

Sound Accompaniment, Talking Sequences for Minimum of 25 to 30

PARAMOUNT has completed plans for sound pictures during the coming season, according to an official statement by the company. Of the 71 Paramount feature pictures to be released next year beginning August 1, a minimum of 25 to 30 will have sound accompaniment, most of them with talking sequences.

Paramount News will present a large part of its service in sound, and the one and two reel short features, including the Christie Comedies, will also have sound accompaniment.

In addition the company will sell a new type of picture, which will be sound pictures of the stage unit productions such as appear on the stage of the Paramount Theatre and other big theatres operated by Publix. By this move smaller theatres throughout the country will have the opportunity of booking the big stage shows that are now a feature of the de luxe houses in the larger cities. Lavish novelties featuring popular acting, singing and dancing stars, the pick of the world's stage and screen talent, will be presented in these special short reels.

Hollywood to Be Centre

The major part of Paramount's sound activities will be centered in the company's studio in Hollywood, but reconstruction of the Paramount Long Island studio for the production of sound pictures is progressing rapidly. As announced last week by Adolph Zukor, president of the company, those sound pictures which can be most advantageously filmed in the East because of the proximity of speaking stage talent will be made at the Astoria plant.

Among the feature length productions with sound, which either are already in work or have been completed, are the following:

"Wings," the William Wellman production with Charles Rogers, Clara Bow, Richard Arlen and Gary Cooper featured.

Erich von Stroheim's "The Wedding March." All the great highlights of this picture—the wedding music—bells and trumpetings—will be heard as well as seen. Featured in the cast are von Stroheim, who directed and Fay Wray.

Anne Nichols' "Abie's Irish Rose," which will have in addition to the music score, other sound effects, such as the singing of the theme song by Charles Rogers and Nancy Carroll, who, with Jean Hersholt, are featured.

"The Patriot," Ernst Lubitsch's feature, which stars Emil Jannings. Sound production for this picture will incorporate the thunderous Russian marches, the charge of the yelling Cossacks, pistol shots as the innocent are shot down and the members of the cast talking in the climactic scenes. Featured in support of Jannings are Florence Vidor, Lewis Stone and Neil Hamilton.

"The Canary Murder Case," a detective mystery melodrama with William Powell, Louise Brooks, Ruth Taylor and James Hall featured in the cast under the direction of Malcolm St. Clair. In addition to the music and sound effects this picture will have a number of talking sequences.

"Loves of an Actress" starring Pola Negri and directed by Rowland V. Lee. Nils Asther and strong cast support Miss Negri. Sound accompaniment for this production will consist of a music score and sound effects for the dramatic sequences.

"Warming Up," a lavishly produced comedy-drama starring Richard Dix. Sound accompaniment for this production combines the sound atmosphere of a baseball game, singing of the theme song and the music score. Jean Arthur has the leading feminine role in this Fred Newmeyer production.

Paramount has acquired the rights to "Burlesque," the Broadway comedy-drama that has run nearly a year in New York.

Sound effects, voice and the music score will be heard in the Christie series of short features released next season. The first five Christies synchronized with sound in all its phases are: "Skating Home" of the series, "Confessions of a Chorus Girl," with Frances Lee and the Christie beauties; "The Dizzy Diver" and "Oriental Hugs" of the Billy Dooley series; "Stop Kidding," a Bobby Vernon comedy and "Hot Scotch" of the "Sandy MacDuff" series starring Jack Duffy.

While in New York, Charles Christie announced that, in addition to the foregoing, his company will produce two special sound short features.

Christie Signs Contract

Charles Christie, vice president of the Christie Company, has signed a contract with Electrical Research Products, subsidiary of the Western Electric Company, whereby Electrical Research Products will erect a sound-proof stage on the Christie lot in Hollywood. Construction is under way and it is expected that the stage will be completed in 30 days.

"We will use the Movietone (film) system of sound recording in production of the major portion of the 32 short features which Paramount will release this year," said Mr. Christie. "Owing to the necessity for conforming to release dates, we

"U" Announces 18 for Synchronization

Laemmle Company Is Planning Big Season for Sound Pictures

EIGHTEEN features of Universal's 1928-1929 product will reach the screen as synchronized pictures, it is announced by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation. Ten of these features already have been selected, the first two now being synchronized by the Movietone method. Various Universal Short Subjects also will be synchronized.

The Universal Sound Pictures will not be just mere sound pictures, but will use the sound mechanism as a means of injecting what is characterized at the Universal home office as exploitable and showmanship angles into the pictures.

This synchronization of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will feature the Dixie Jubilee Singers in a series of folk songs and negro melodies. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" also will be synchronized by Erno Rapee and his philharmonic orchestra.

Following Universal's decision, announced last week, of putting sound into "Uncle Tom's Cabin," by special arrangement with Movietone and the Fox-Case organization, the next step in Universal's progress in the sound field was the decision to do the same with "The Man Who Laughs."

The final decision, by Laemmle, to go into sound pictures in a big way, was made over the week-end, after extended conferences with Universal officials and executives, including Universal exchange managers from more than a dozen offices.

In addition to the two pictures above named, the following eight features are announced for immediate adaptation as sound pictures. Some of them are already completed, some are now in the making, and some are yet to be made.

"The Last Warning," the mystery melodrama now being made by Paul Leni with Laura La Plante as star.

"The Girl on the Barge," the Rupert Hughes story of the Erie Canal, now being directed at Whitehall, N. Y. by Edward Sloman, with Sally O'Neil, Jean Hersholt and Malcolm MacGregor in the featured roles; "The Cohens and the Kellys in Atlantic City;" "Red Hot Speed," to be one of the Reginald Denny Specials; "Jazz Mad," a dramatic feature with Jean Hersholt; "Man, Woman and Wife," featuring Norman Kerry, Pauline Starke, Kenneth Harlan and Marian Nixon; "Red Lips," featuring Charles Rogers and Marian Nixon; "That Blonde," a Laura La Plante feature.

Franklin Sees Theatre Developed Along Mechanical Lines

THE importance of sound synchronization to the screens of today and tomorrow is emphasized by Harold B. Franklin, president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., in a statement issued recently.

"From now on the motion picture industry may look to the laboratories of the foremost electrical organizations for further progress," he says. "Science and the motion picture theatre from now on go hand in hand. The theatre of tomorrow will be largely developed along mechanical lines. No one may predict what will be contributed by science in the years to come . . . . talking pictures and sound synchronization are but a forerunner of any developments that we may look forward to.

"West Coast Theatres were one of the first circuits who recognized the value of the talking picture. At this time over thirty-five important West Coast theatres are already equipped and have shown the best product available of this type. Both the Fox Movietone, as well as Warners' Vitaphone found a prominent place in its programs. More than twenty-five additional theatres are being equipped and a large order has been placed for additional equipment.

"Within the next few months every important producer will contribute pictures with either synchronized scores or talking and singing sequences or both. Some of the best minds in the industry believe that this combined effort will help to stimulate a new and added interest in the motion picture theatre."

Roach Will Use Only Sound Effects

HAL ROACH is planning first to use only sound effects and musical synchronization as illumination for the fun in his comedies. For the present he will not introduce dialogue and patter. This much was revealed at a dinner given by Roach last week to thirty-five players, directors, executives and department heads to discuss plans for synchronization of Roach-M-G-M comedies.

The dinner followed the return from the east of Benjamin W. Shipman, studio business manager, who thoroughly investigated all angles of sound devices. Others besides Roach and Shipman who adressed the diners were Warren Doane, general manager; H. M. Walker, vice-president, and Leo McCarey, supervising director and vice-president of the Hal Roach Studios, Inc.

Paramount Announces Season Plans

were compelled to go ahead with production on several of our stories without the sound recording but those pictures now finished will be released with the disc system of sound accompaniment.

"This new form of screen entertainment finds the Christie Company well prepared as the greater number of its players have had considerable stage experience before starting their motion picture careers. Billy Dooley came to us from the vaudeville stage; Bobby Vernon had spent a number of years in stock and musical comedy; Jack Duffy originally appeared in vaudeville. Neal Burns, Eddie Baker, practically all of our players have had stage training. They will have no trouble in registering before the microphone.

"According to advices from the Electrical Research Company 1125 theatres in the United States will be equipped for sound reproduction by January 1, 1929. Realizing that thousands of Christie customers will not be equipped for the sound films, we have arranged to make sufficient straight prints to cover the needs of those theatres that do not have sound reproduction equipment installed during the new film year.

"The advent of sound accompaniment in Christie short features will prove of benefit even to those exhibitors who are unable to secure reproduction equipment during the next year, for, in making the new product, story detail and production value will receive more attention than ever.

"The short reel comedy field has always been regarded as the training ground for feature stars of later years. It has been my pleasure to have had a hand in the training of many stellar players groomed by our company who later were drafted by the feature length picture producers.

"Naturally this new production phase will attract to the screen many legitimate and vaudeville players that heretofore confined their talents to the speaking stage. These players, I am sure, will enhance the value of comedies in that they will answer the public's demand for new faces."

M-G-M Receives First Recording Unit

The first unit of recording apparatus arriving in seventy-seven packing cases, is ready to be installed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in the new "sound stage" now in course of construction.

The unit includes the complete Western Electric recording apparatus with a number of special features from the Electric Research Products Laboratories, and installation will commence as soon as the concrete structure is completed.

Pomeroy Soon Ready to Film Paramount's First

Roy J. Pomeroy, executive technical expert of the Lasky studio, has his experimental stage entirely sound proofed, practically all of his sound recording equipment installed and will soon be ready to film Paramount's first talking motion picture.

England Now Agog Over Sound Pictures

Enthusiasm Running High With Many New Devices Introduced

ENGLAND is just as much agog over the sound reproducing apparatus as is the United States, and several systems are being advanced with the claim that they are just as effective as American devices and at much lower rates of installation. The excitement abroad over the sound films has apparently all come to a head within the past few weeks. On the arrival here a month ago of J. D. Williams, he said there was little interest in England at that time in talking movies. The British trade press is now full of sound film propaganda announcing the various devices.

Using DeForest Device

DeForest Phonofilms is one of the principal devices being exploited, with Harold Holt, managing director for the company making the statement in the Daily Film Renter that DeForest produces as good a sound film as the Americans at less than quarter the cost. The company has equipped and moved into its Wembley studio, to which is attached various subsidiary studios and laboratories. At the new studio it is estimated they will turn out 3,000 feet a week, chiefly of short subjects and topicals in general, including a series of pictures of a comedy nature by Ernie Lotinga.

The cost of the DeForest apparatus, Mr. Holt is quoted as saying, would be about £300, but as a rule no cost is involved upon the exhibitor. The latter pays rent for films only, and the apparatus is supplied with no extra charge whatsoever. Regarding the cost of rental, Mr. Holt said their minimum charge for 3,000 feet a week is £16, 10s., showing alternate weeks, including hire and maintenance of apparatus.

Regarding another device, "Cinema," says:

"Recently British Brunswick, the controllers of 'Panatrope,' acquired a device from a Bristol inventor, which enables a gramaphone record to be played in exact synchronization with film. The most important developments are expected to follow the purchase of this invention.

Project Under Way

"We are now able to state that a project is under consideration for the formation of a new company to handle this device, and that the men interested are well known to the film world; that in all probability a company will be formed to make pictures; to make specially prepared gramaphone records to accompany them, and to market the synchronizing device.

"In other words, if the scheme goes through as at present planned, it will mean the formation of a British company to undertake in England a campaign almost identical with that put over in America by Warner Brothers when they first began to make pictures with Vitaphone accompaniment, but apparently on a much cheaper scale."

Another sound process is reported perfected by British Acoustics, Ltd., the company controlled by Gaumont-British, and will be marketed shortly throughout Britain and Europe.

Discussing this process with a special correspondent of "The Renter," J. Metcalfe, manager of British Acoustics, Ltd., said:

"At this moment we have completed a number of short topical films, one of which you now hear being demonstrated. Feature films will perhaps follow. At present all I can say is that we have taken a record of a London stage success which after a long and successful run came off the boards in London a month ago, and has gone to the provinces."

Already Installed

Already the Acoustic films apparatus, Mr. Metcalfe stated, has been installed for some time at two or three cinema theatres. It has now been simplified and perfected to an extent that justifies its wholesale installation, and it will before long be adopted by the Gaumont circuit.

"It has been wrongly stated that our process costs £500 to install.

"That is an exaggeration. Actually the cost will be approximately no more than £300. Compare that," added Mr. Metcalfe, "with the figures, up to £3,000, mentioned as the cost of installation of other sound-film apparatus.

"For the past two years we have been working on the simplification, both as regard costs and operating, of our process, and now I can state that not only can we do all they (the American sound-films) can do, but we can do it a very great deal cheaper. It is not for me to say whether we can do it better. Our process must speak for itself."

Movietone to Follow Hoover, Smith

THE voice of Governor Smith, if he is nominated at the Democratic convention in Houston, and Herbert Hoover, Republican candidate for president, will be filmed by Fox Movietone cameras wherever they speak between now and next November and projected in motion picture theatres throughout the country.

This announcement was made by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, who has assigned Movietone camera crews to follow the presidential candidates wherever they go in their campaign. These sight and sound records of the political campaign will be shown in one thousand theatres in the United States that will be equipped by the first of October to show Movietone pictures.

Capitol, Ottawa, Will Be First to Feature "Talkies"

The Capitol in Ottawa, Canada, will be the first theatre in Canada to be completely and permanently equipped with mechanical facilities for the presentation of audible pictures. The talking films has of late been widely discussed but with the exception of a few brief occasions when audofilms were screened in theatre in a number of cities as demonstrations, there has been no definite move by theatre companies or exhibitors to install equipment for the sound pictures. On two or three occasions the talkies were presented at the Regent in Ottawa but there was nothing permanent about the arrangement.

The Capitol will open toward the end of the year under the auspices of Famous Players Canadian Corporation. One feature of the house will be the one box of the theatre—the Royal Box, which will be reserved for royalty and high executives.

Columbia Studios Now in Active Production

With the completion of a new stage, Columbia studios is now working vigorously in all departments.

Alan Crosland is putting Lya De Putti through her paces in "The Scarlet Woman," which deals with Russian refugees. Irvin Willat is beginning the first scenes of "Into the Depths," the submarine story starring Jack Holt.

The editors and cutters are now working on "Beware of Blondes" and "Say It with Sables." Millard Webb is preparing to start "Trial Marriage," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Elizabeth Alexander. Ben Grauman Kohn is doing the adaptation.

Tiffany-Stahl Announces All Product To Be Synchronized

TIFFANY-STAHL announces that plans are about completed for the synchronization of all their feature productions and Tiffany Color pictures for 1928-29.

It is understood that all of the Big 10 special feature productions scheduled for release for 1928-29 will be vocalized, orchestrated and have talking sequences.

It is more than likely that "The Toilers," the Reginald Barker special, will be the first to be so equipped and shown for an extended run in a Broadway theatre in the early fall.

George Jessel, who has just completed "The Ghetto," will be heard and seen in this picture scheduled for early release.

Pathe Rooster Crows Lustily as Photophone Makes Trademark Record

MR. PATHE, the All-American rooster chosen at Madison Square Garden as the bird most suitable for screen duty as a replica of the Pathe animated trademark, has caught the spirit of the times and had his voice recorded on the R C A Photophone. In future Pathe pictures which are synchronized with the marvelous new sound device, Mr. Pathe will bring his barnyard war cry to the screen, crowing lustily just preceding the unfolding of the titles.

Colvin Brown, Executive Vice-President of Pathe; John C. Flinn, Vice-President, and other executives, are highly pleased with the vocal efforts of the feathered gent, known to screen fans the world over for a quarter of a century as the Pathe trademark.

There were some misgivings at the R C A Photophone Studios when Norton B. Cooper, of Closter, N. J., the owner of Mr. Pathe, unleashed him from a gilded cage under the kleigs. The big question in the mind of Richard Currier, head of production for the R C A Photophone, and his staff, was whether the rooster would crow in this rather strange environment. Cooper, who had had the bird manicured and rouged for the occasion, asserted that he would crow 'till the cows came home, but all the while there was revolving in Mr. Currier's mind the problem of where to get a double in the event that Mr. Pathe closed up like a clam when high on his perch before the mike.

Frank Gillmore Foresees Bright Days for Legitimate Actor

FRANK GILLMORE, executive secretary of Actors' Equity Association, in his annual report to the association published in "Equity," makes some interesting comment on sound pictures, in which he sees the legitimate actor coming into his own.

Mr. Gillmore's report on this subject follows:

"Several times within the last few weeks I have been asked about the new talking pictures which threaten to flood the market shortly. They are certainly a wonderful invention and if they be all that is claimed for them I think you actors of the speaking stage are going to come into your own again.

"I have nothing but respect for the motion picture player, but up to now the most important part of his equipment as an actor has never been called upon. Four-fifths of our technique, yours and mine, depends on the voice, and what years of practice it takes to make that sufficient unto our needs. I wonder if some of the truly beautiful creatures which float across the screen today will be quite as successful when they have to speak the lines of a long part. To do this their voices must be carefully modulated without a trace of accent except when the characterization calls for it. Some of us of the legitimate have been told that we don't possess screen faces. I wonder how many in the future will suffer from the accusation of being minus screen voices?

"We are aware of the keen business sense of the successful screen producer, but I wonder if he has foreseen all the difficulties in his new venture. A speech, a stunt or an act as demonstrated by the Vitaphone is one thing, but the drama requires memorizing and very careful preparation. We usually rehearse four weeks and often consider that inadequate without an additional two weeks of actual performing. That will entail much preliminary expense to the studios, as you will have to be paid for those rehearsals, besides, how will you be able to time your laughs, to regulate your pauses and other effects without testing them out before an audience. It will be awkward when the talking machine continues on mechanically, thereby killing several gusts of laughter. Screen directors are accustomed to megaphone their instructions, but under the new conditions they must be silent or the recording instruments will give them away.

"As I see it, there will have to be two directors—a stage one and a screen one—and I hereby and herewith call upon the American Arbitration Association to settle their differences. In the talking film the market will be restricted to the English speaking countries and profits reduced while the expenses will be much increased. I recognize that the talent of the inventors will create a tableau as large as our present stage so that the characters will not be bunched and have to hiss their words into one another's ears as at present.

"In conclusion I beg to repeat that any way you take it the new talking films will mean increased employment for you but will never actually replace the regular drama."

RCA to Synchronize 10 Pathe Specials

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that ten of its big specials on the 1928-29 program, including "The King of Kings" and "The Godless Girl" will be synchronized through the new RCA Photophone process.

In addition to the two DeMille productions, Pathe has selected the following specials and features for RCA Photophone synchronization:

"Show Folks," with Lina Basquette, Eddie Quillan and Robert Armstrong; "The Spieler," with Jacqueline Logan and Alan Hale; "Annapolis," with Jeanette Loff and John Mack Brown; "Ned McCobb's Daughter," with Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Armstrong; "Noisy Neighbors," with Eddie Quillan and the Quillan family of eight; "The Leatherneck," starring William Boyd, with Lina Basquette, Robert Armstrong and Alan Hale; "Square Shoulders," with Junior Coghlan and George Duryea; "Listen Baby," with Lina Basquette and Eddie Quillan.

The premiere of "The Godless Girl" at the Gaiety Theatre in New York and the Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles in August will be the world's first demonstration of RCA Photophone, the organization created by the combined engineering staffs of General Electric, Westinghouse and Radio Corporation of America.

New Ark. House Designed For Orchestraphone

The increasing popularity of the "Orchestraphone," is reflected in the construction of a new theatre at Cullendale, Arkansas, especially designed for featuring this synchronizing instrument.

Architects of this house, which has been named the Folly, have provided special tone chambers at the sides of the stage for the installation of Orchestraphone horns, and have included a room in the rear of the theatre in which the instrument itself, together with the library of records has been placed.

The Folly, a 500 seat house is most modern in every detail, and is owned and operated by W. W. Henderson, manager of the International Paper Company mills at Camden, Arkansas.

Mr. Henderson is generally enthusiastic about the splendid pulling power that the Orchestraphone has demonstrated since the opening of his theatre some weeks ago.

Vitaphone Inaugurated at Reading, Pa.

The Vitaphone season was inaugurated in Reading, Pa., on June 18, in the Strand theatre, a house seating 1,800 persons, and which, it was announced will be the new home of Vitaphone during the period of the construction of the new million-dollar Astor theatre on the site of the old Arcadia which is being demolished. The opening Vitaphone performance at the Strand was "Glorious Betsy," So great is the anticipated popularity of Vitaphone attractions in Reading this summer that special arrangements have been made for handling especially big crowds at the Strand. The Strand is controlled by the Franklin Theatre Company chain.

Christie Announcement Due from Coast Soon

Mr. Christie is expected to make an official announcement of his company's plans regarding sound pictures within the next few days.

Voice Fadeout Needed, Says Technician

ONE of the big opportunities beckoning the inventor, with the new development of the talking picture is a fadeout for the human voice, according to Douglas Shearer, technician in recording experiments now under way at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

"One of the first things we are going to need," said Shearer, "is some method of 'fading out' in a vocal record just as a film 'fadeout' is effected in pictures. This will be necessary or at any rate very useful so that we can have a character speaking, then fade his voice out and into a written title to take up footage where a narrative spoken title might be too long. If we can find some convincing way to work this change it will make the talking movie very flexible."

Harrisburg Houses Equip For Sound Pictures

The first Vitaphone and Movietone services for Harrisburg, Pa., are about to be installed as a permanent proposition in the Colonial and Victoria theatres, belonging to the Wilmer & Vincent chain, it was announced on June 22 by Lee Levy, manager of the two houses, both of them big first run theatres in the central business district. Contracts have been signed and forwarded to the manufacturers and it is the expectation that both will be ready for operation early in the Fall.

Columbia May Use Both Sound Systems

Columbia Pictures is considering the use of both film and disc recording of sound pictures and may use both systems, according to Joe Brandt, president of the company. So far he has not definitely decided upon either method, though the company is planning to synchronize the first release of the 1928-29 program. The system to be used or the announcement that both will be used, will be announced as soon as it is determined what is to be the first picture made for the new season.

Fox Making Full Length Talking Feature

William Conselman, supervisor of the Fox West Coast studio, has just started directing a full-length talking feature. It is called "Four A. M.," and was written by Conselman himself.

This comedy will have in the cast Marjorie Beebe, Sammy Cohen, Tyler Brooke, Ben Bard and Henry Armetta.

Central Penn. Theatres Install Vitaphone

Recent installations of the Vitaphone in Central Pennsylvania theatres have been announced as follows: Capitol Theatre, Bloomsburg, recently opened by the Comerford Amusement Company, of Scranton; Colonial Theatre, Lebanon, recently taken over by John A. Jackson, and State Theatre, Nanticoke, owned by Connelly & Quigley.

Canned Music War Brings First Pitched Battle in St. Louis

THE first pitched battle of the Musicians Union's war on "canned" music was fought near Luxemburg, St. Louis County, on Saturday, June 23. Only minor casualties were reported by the police who made nine arrests in connection with the fracas.

The musicians connected with the local unions of St. Louis have taken an active part in the conflict to educate the music loving public of the United States and Canada as to the advantages of music produced by human efforts compared with mechanical reproduction of such music. Part of the campaign has been to picket theatres and amusement parks that have substituted mechanical music for members of the union while automobile trucks carrying banners and a band have traveled over the streets of St. Louis and St. Louis County to advertise places that are using mechanical organs and other substitutes for human music.

Recently the Lemay Ferry Theatre in Luxemburg opened and is now using a mechanical organ to furnish music for its motion pictures. Officials of the musicians union protested and endeavored to convince Leopold Lau, 61 years old, of 7829 Ivory Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., owner and manager of the theatre that he should replace the organ with regular musicians. He refused to do so.

On Saturday afternoon, June 23, the automobile "band wagon" of the musicians carrying ten members of the union was dispatched to the Luxemburg sector to create interest in human music.

There are two versions of what happened when the "band wagon" passed the home of Lau. At any rate the police from the Carondelet District of St. Louis after responding to a riot call arrested nine men, Lau, his two sons, Lee, 23 years old; Irvin, 21 and William Hazard, 17; Steve H. Butler, business agent for the musicians union; Emil Batuno, leader of the band; Eugene L. Van Meter, Gilmer Cobbel and Charles W. Biehl, members of the musician union. Other members of the musicians band were not arrested. All those arrested were booked on peace disturbance charges.

The truck bearing the band and carrying banners that charged the Lemay Ferry Theatre with being unfair to the union musicians had been touring the neighborhood. It was followed by a touring car from which handbills against the theatre were being scattered.

According to Butler, business agent for the union, Lau and his followers unexpectedly charged from the driveway alongside his home, tore the signs from the truck and assaulted the occupants of the touring car.

Lau's contention was that as the truck passed his home the occupants made opprobrious remarks concerning him.

When the police reserves arrived at the scene a general fist fight was in progress.

On June 21 a delegate of union leaders called on Governor Baker at Jefferson City to protest against the attitude of the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners toward the campaign of the musicians against canned music. It was charged that the police are persecuting the musicians and the governor was asked to conduct a personal investigation into the situation.

The committee which went to Jefferson City was composed of Reuben T. Wood, president of the Missouri State Federation of Labor; Daniel Murphy, president of the St. Louis Central Trades and Labor Union; George R. Sound Puts Remarkable Realism into Storm Sequence of "King of Kings"

By CHESTER J. SMITH

IF one has any doubt as to the effectiveness of sound in pictures, this will be completely dispelled when the sound effects are revealed under the Photophone process in "The King of Kings," into which these sound effects musical and synchronization have just been set.

This writer sat in on the invitation of E. E. Bucher, vice-president of RCA Photophone, while the reel showing the storm scene following the crucifixion was projected. Not in a long career of looking over movies have I seen anything so impressive or effective as this sound synchronization. It is so realistic as to be absolutely astounding and actually borders on the horrifying.

There are the flashes of lightning, the cracking and rolling of the thunder and the horrified screams of the multitude as the earth opens up from the series of earthquakes and they are plunged into the great crevices.

All this brings realism that must of necessity have been absent in the silent films. In the past it has been necessary to draw upon the imagination to provide back-stage effects to get the full import of a sequence of this kind. It is terrifying, but it will make of "The King of Kings" one of the most talked of pictures that has been seen on the screen.

Sound Picture Reviews

"Miss Information"

THIS is an exceptionally clever little Vitaphone playlet with Lois Wilson and Edward Everett Horton in the leading roles. Both have good voices for the screen and the story is well worked out. In it Miss Wilson is a stenographer in an up-state New York town and Horton, in a new job with some unscrupulous brokers, is detailed to the town to buy up cheaply an important invention from the widow of the deceased inventor. Norton, seeking information on arrival in the town, asks particulars of Miss Wilson and imparts his plan to her. She convinces him that he is doing a wrong, not paying the full price for so valuable an invention. He phones his firm that it cannot be had for the small sum offered and they boost the price to $10,000. He tells them that the widow is asking $30,000 and will take no less, for which he is fired. Miss Wilson, it develops, is the daughter of the widow. She agrees to marry the salesman and the two decide to promote the invention themselves.—Chester J. Smith.

Fox Movietone Subjects

Fox is presenting George Bernard Shaw as a Movietone subject. Shaw, a world-wide figure, has been looked upon as one aloof and apart from the crowd. He has refused to visit America and he is not the type to grant audiences to people except those seated in the high places. Yet through the Movietone he reaches the masses—and the masses will accept him as a genuinely friendly man.

Through recording his rich voice and capturing his wit and humor and the colorful personality he represents Fox has done as much for Shaw and his writings as Shaw has done for Movietone.

The film shows him walking on a gravel path into a close-up and the crunching of his shoes as he approaches is plainly heard. A tall figure and distinguished looking he immediately wins his audience. Then he starts in selling his personality by typically Shavian wise-cracks. In all he's the best Movietone subject that has appeared. And he wouldn't do so bad as an actor since he's gifted with showmanship and a flair for pantomime.

The Movietone also presents in its latest program the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palace—and this colorful ceremony brought down from medieval times will surely be appreciated. One hears the bands and the commands of the officer and the measured tread of the Guard is a sight which never fails in its appeal. Governor Al Smith also figures in the Movietone through his visit to Governor's Island during a recent carnival.

And the first two-reel comedy to be recorded through Movietone, "The Family Picnic," is interesting. But the piece goes back to first principles in its design. Without the dialogue and sound effects it would be dismissed as exceptionally old-fashioned. It shows promise of what will be accomplished in the future.—Laurence Reid.

First National Is Reported Negotiating for Photophone

IT seems likely that First National will use the Photophone system of sound recording and reproducing in connection with the product to be made for the 1928-29 season. It is understood that First National is now negotiating with R. C. A., which controls the Photophone system, and that the deal will be closed within the next few days. It is said that one of the First National features for the new season has already been synchronized by the Photophone process.

The proposed swing of First National to Photophone is attributed partly to the recent connection of Joseph P. Kennedy with First National. R. C. A. is part owner of FBO, of which Mr. Kennedy is also the head. Pathe has also definitely announced that it will use the Photophone system.

It had been previously announced that First National would use the Western Electric system under the name of Firnatone, but it is now claimed that the deal with Western Electric was never actually consummated. The agreement is said only to have been a preliminary one. First National made the announcement of Firnatone just previously to the company's sales convention, and at a time when it seemed almost sure that the Western Electric Company deal would be closed.

There has been no definite announcement either from First National or from Photophone that the companies are now in negotiation, but it is understood that this is a fact, and that one picture has already been synchronized or is now in the process of synchronization.

L. A. Houses Equip for Talkies

Hollywood, June 23.—The success of Warner Brothers' theatre in Hollywood has expedited the equipping of more theatres in the vicinity with talking devices. Loew's State and the Metropolitan theatres, the two largest downtown houses, are now installing movietone equipment. A score of experts arrived here last week from New York and are now busily engaged in equipping both theatres for the influx of "talkies" from Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox and First National studios.

A private car containing the experts from the Electrical Research Products Acoustic Department of the Western Electric Company, arrived in Los Angeles, together with all paraphernalia for a complete installation. The projection equipment comes direct to the Coast from Philadelphia and is said to be the last word in talking devices.

Rehearsals of the equipment will be held this week and active operation of the theatres with sound and voice pictures will commence about July 7.

Only two Los Angeles theatres are so equipped at present—Warner Bros. and the Tower theatre, a 1000 seat house playing to 25 cents top. Warner Bros. prices are 35, 50 and 65 cents. Over 150,000 people paid admissions to Warner Bros. theatre during the short run of "The Lion and the Mouse." It seats 3,000 persons.

Buck Jones Production Will Be Synchronized

Synchronization of music and sound effects will be an added feature of "The Big Hop," the forthcoming special production starring Buck Jones. The picture is now in production at Universal City and will be the first to be made under Buck's own trade mark as an independent producer. The sound-on-film method of recording will be used.

Christie Signs Western Electric Contract

The Christie Film Corporation is the latest producer to sign contracts for the use of the Western Electric System of Sound Pictures. The contracts were executed with Electrical Research Products, Inc., subsidiary of the Western Electric. Equipment for the recording of sound in conjunction with the Christie features and short subjects will be installed in the Hollywood Studio of the company.

Battle Over Canned Music in St. Louis

Bafuno who was arrested several weeks ago for passing out handbills in the vicinity of the Astor and Senate theatres calling the public's attention to the fact that the theatres were using mechanical music now has pending in the St. Louis Circuit Court a civil suit in which he asks for heavy damages from members of the police department, the police board and owners of the theatres on the grounds they conspired to arrest him.

De Mille Slated to Join United Artists

Producer Will Make Two a Year, is Report; First Will Be Story By Himself

HOLLYWOOD, June 25.—Cecil B. DeMille will go over to the United Artists lot on August 1st, according to reports going the rounds of Hollywood. It is understood that the producer's first picture for the United Artists will be an original which he has written. Under the reported agreement, he will produce two pictures a year.

It is expected that the De Mille contract stars—William Boyd, Rod LaRocque, Alan Hale and Phyllis Haver—will join him at United Artists after completing their vehicles for Pathe. They are all under personal contract to De Mille. The new De Mille productions will be financed by Joseph M. Schenck and Joseph P. Kennedy the report asserts.

The original story by De Mille is now being adapted by Jeanie McPherson.

Rowland's Message

The F B O-Pathe-First National combine is the principal subject of conversation around the film capital at present. A message from Richard A. Rowland, vice-president and general manager of First National, addressed to all employes of the studio at Burbank, received June 22, stated that following a conference with Joseph P. Kennedy no changes in the personnel of the studio was contemplated at present.

The recent economy wave that swept through the DeMille-Pathe studio at Culver City took with it many of that company's well-known actors, directors and lesser officials.

Costume Plays Again

Is there a revival of costume plays in the offing?

It appears that there may be for no less directorial genius than Fred Niblo has set the pace by definitely announcing his intention of presenting the screen dramatization of a French play of eighteenth century period. The story depicts the life of Adrienne Lecouveur, whose popularity as an actress was at its zenith about the year of 1730. It was written by the French authors—Scribe and Le Gouve and temporarily, at least, the name of the celebrated actress will be used as a title.

This picture which is scheduled for production early in July, will be a Fred Niblo Production and will employ an all star cast. It is said that the characters are of such balanced importance that the story would not serve as a starring vehicle for any particular stellar light.

The adaptation and continuity are being prepared by Dorothy Farnum. It will be recalled that Miss Farnum served in this capacity in connection with Mr. Niblo's "The Temptress" and other of her efforts have indicated a marked ability in preparing this sort of material for the screen.

Columbia in Full Blast

With the beginning of "Out of the Depths," starring Jack Holt, Columbia Studios continue to operate at capacity. Besides the Holt picture which Irvin Willat is directing, "The Scarlet Lady" has passed the half-way mark; two pictures are being edited and one is being prepared for immediate production. Ralph Graves and Dorothy Revier are featured in the Willat submarine special. The pictures being edited are "Beware of Blondes," which was directed by George B. Seitz, and "Say it With Sables," which Frank Capra recently completed. "Trial Marriage," is being adapted by Ben Grauman Kohn and will be directed by Millard Webb.

Henry King Returning to Inspiration

HENRY KING will return to Inspiration Pictures. Contracts, negotiated between the director, J. Boyce Smith, vice president, and Emil Jensen, Inspiration's New York representative, have been signed.

King will be a producer-director, his first directorial work to be on Rupert Hughes' "She Goes to War," which will be produced by Inspiration in conjunction with Victor and Edward Halperin. The story was originally entitled, "Womanhood."

Walter Camp, president of Inspiration, placed his official stamp of approval on the contract via telegraph wires.

Inspiration Pictures' home is at Tec-Art Studios and it will be at that plant that "She Goes to War," will be produced. Extensive alterations have been made by Tec-Art and the studio is ready for a season of unusual production activity.

The Inspiration-Halperin production will be released through United Artists.

The Only Film Rotarian

J. Boyce Smith, vice-president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., is the first and only representative in the field of motion picture production to be accorded the distinction of having been elected as a member of the Hollywood Rotary Club. Nevertheless, he received his initiation at a club luncheon on Tuesday, June 19, and is very happy about it.

New Fox Laboratory

The Fox company will dedicate its new $500,000 laboratory building on June 29 with appropriate ceremonies. The cornerstone of the new building marks the site on which the first two reel comedy ever made on the Fox lot was started, in the Fall of 1916.

Gertrude Olmstead Signed

Gertrude Olmstead has been signed by Harold Shumate, production chief for Sam Sax and Gotham Productions, to play the lead in "The Man Higher Up." Scott Dunlap will direct. Shumate also is launching three other pictures including "The River Woman." Joseph Henaberry will direct this, an original story by Shumate. "Through the Breakers" and "Father and Son" are the other two.

Free Circus

A free circus was given on the F B O lot last Sunday by studio officials in connection with the filming of "The Circus Kid." Banners were stretched across Melrose Ave. advising the public that "open house" was in order all day Sunday and 3,500 seats were provided for the public under the big top on the lot. George B. Seitz is directing the opus and by advertising the stunt the producer secured a large crowd of "extras" to act as audience [illegible].

Birthday

Clive Cook, motion picture player, and his wife, formerly Alice Knowlton, ex-Follies girl, are the proud parents of a 6½ pound daughter, born at the Hollywood hospital June 20. She is to be known as Julia Ann.

Jones Films Aerial Scenes

Buck Jones thrilled visitors to the American airport, on Sunday, when thousands viewed the filming of several aerial scenes for "The Big Hop." Jones used eight [illegible] of a trans-atlantic flight. This was the first time that the public was invited to watch the taking of an aerial picture and was only made possible by the great size of the American airport.

MANAGERS ROUND TABLE CLUB
THE CLEARING HOUSE FOR BOX OFFICE PROBLEMS and THEATRE OPERATION

By Charles E. Lewis

Managing Director, Capitol Theatre, Middletown, Conn., and Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn.

(Editor's Note.—Here is the second suggestion sent in by W. H. Whyte, of the Rialto Theatre, Hartford. This suggestion can be worked with Boy Scouts, Schools and many other organizations.)

Club Tie-Up Idea Successful

I want to tell you of a tie-up we have worked up for the past two years with our local South End Neighborhood Club. This club is composed of residents in the south end of the city, people from whom we draw our patronage. Each Spring we run a benefit performance for this club. The monies accrued from this benefit are used to promote the athletic and general welfare of the south end school children. A baseball coach is engaged by the Club each year to look after the school baseball teams and this year our school is leading in its division and will play off the finals for the city championship. And then, two weeks before school is out for summer vacation, the Club stages a Field Day and all the school children, girls and boys, participate in the various events for prizes which are awarded by the Club. This red letter day in their lives ends up with free ice cream and some sort of confection. Can you imagine the publicity we get out of this with every kid in the neighborhood talking about the Club and the theatre? I forgot to state that I also have a camera man on the job to shoot a little of each race or game, the children in groups and the fathers and mothers who also are present. This film I run the following week, and, of course, they all want to see how they look on the screen.

In putting on this benefit show each child is given a number of special tickets to sell and what an army we have selling tickets! Club members also receive an allotment which they are to dispose of at regular evening admission prices. Matinees belong to the house and the house gets a guarantee for the two nights the benefit is held. The program offered consists of our regular picture program and juvenile amateur acts selected from the volunteers from the school. So many children volunteer their services and in order not to disappoint the children and their parents, we select five acts for the first night and five for the second night. This satisfies both the children and the parents.

The tie-up works out very well. It brings in the money and creates good will, both of which are essential to the theatre. Next year a new school will have been completed in this end of the town and the prospects are bright for "bigger and better tie-ups."

Let's Get Together

IT has often been said that a man is judged by the company he keeps. If such is the case, then your membership application should have been sent in weeks ago. Don't stay on the outside looking in.

If you could sit beside me at my desk and look over the letters I am receiving from all over the country, you would readily understand why you should be enrolled as a member of the club.

Variation on "Gift" Nite

Charles M. Maxfield, resident manager of the Palace Theatre, in Norwich, Conn., staged a "Pay Night" a short time ago that gave us one of the greatest box-office surprises of the season.

He had been running a "Gift Nite," which we mentioned some time ago, and for the sake of variety changed it to "Pay Night" for just once. He advertised that every patron entering the theatre would receive a pay envelope. These envelopes contained from one cent up to $10.00, and he prepared for about 800 people, which for a Wednesday night would have been pretty fair business, but he played to exactly 1,455 patrons.

Since Norwich is a manufacturing town, it did not require much plugging to sell them the idea and they came into the theatre in great spirits and the fun and laughing as the envelopes were opened was, in itself, a three-ring circus, and every time a dollar bill came to light the crowd inside howled and applauded. The best part of the whole idea was the care exercised by Mr. Maxfield in seeing that everyone was orderly and handled nicely when they came.

Beating the Opposition

One of the fastest thinking stunts we heard of in recent years was engineered not long ago in a town up here in New England.

The opposition house, to ballyhoo a big vaudeville attraction, had advertised the arrival of the cast in airplanes for Sunday afternoon, a day before the opening of the act. Much comment was created and the advance-man for the act had the idea sold all over the county. Everyone was talking about it and it bid fair to be a great success.

The "other" theatre knew this would make tough competition and as they had an expensive show coming in themselves, something had to be done. And here is what happened:

They engaged an airplane with a well-known parachute jumper to arrive at the same time as the other planes, and as thousands of spectators looked on at the circling planes there appeared a small, strange "ship" out of the skies. A man was seen to leave the cock-pit and walk along the wing of the plane and as it neared the center of the field he jumped. After falling about 500 feet he released his parachute and when this was opened he unrolled a large banner reading—"The ..... Theatre always Leads."

The cheers that went up from the crowds showed that they all entered into the spirit of the joke on the other house and the parachute jumper was surrounded as soon as he reached the ground.

Just how much good this stunt did for business no one can figure. It may, or may not, have meant anything at the box-office, but it did excite plenty of talk and showed that the battle between the two houses was bringing plenty of action.

"Stunts" like this, of course, cannot be recommended for every day in the week, but for some particular occasion, and if the parachute jumper is available, it would certainly attract plenty of attention to anybody's theatre.

A Cool Tip for Hot Weather

At the present time electric refrigerators are all the rage and the competition among the different manufacturers happens to be very keen.

Why not avail yourself of this idea: Tie-up with a local dealer to furnish two or three of these refrigerators with a large capacity of ice cubes. Place them in a conspicuous part of your lobby and serve ice water or lemonade to your patrons with a cube of ice in each cup or glass. The expense involved in this suggestion is surprisingly small and it is bound to create talk among the movie fans about your theatre. Placing the name of the refrigerator and the local dealer alongside of the machines will more than satisfy them and they may even give you a window display in their own showrooms announcing the fact that their machines are being used in conjunction with the theatre on the tie-up.

We have just arranged a plan and had no trouble at all in selling the idea.

Brother members, do me a favor and try this, will you? And if it works out don't forget your pledge: to tell us all about it.

Stresses "Ramona" Song

Hendricks Capitalizes on Popularity of Tune in Campaign for America Theatre

WILLIAM L. HENDRICKS, resident general manager for the Southwestern New York Theatres Corporation in East Liverpool, Ohio, reports to this department the details and results of a thorough-going campaign staged for "Ramona" at the America theatre in East Liverpool. Hendricks turned his heaviest guns on a tie-up with the popular song of the same title and as a result obtained a brand of publicity that proved highly effective as a business builder for the showing of the picture.

In the effort to get the most possible out of the song as a tie-up factor, Hendricks provided several means of presenting the tune to the people of East Liverpool. One of the most ingenious stunts in this direction was an up-to-date adaptation of an idea that has been used in the past only in connection with a military type of story (by having a bugler play various calls from his station atop the marquee of the theatre). This stunt was effectively used for "Ramona" by having a trumpeter, stationed on the roof of a prominent downtown building, play the song "Ramona." At the conclusion of this rendition of the tune, the trumpeter would unroll a banner bearing the title of the picture—one letter below the other—and the line "America, Now." This stunt attracted a great deal of attention to the America's attraction.

The song was also played in the lobby of the theatre. A Panatrope, supplied by a local dealer, was used to play the record of the song in the lobby.

Every confectionery, soda fountain, sandwich shoppe, etc., played up a Ramona Sundae, the same advertising bearing an ad for the picture at the America.

Tie-ups for windows were also arranged with every Jewelry store in town. Several candy stores were also tied up on "Dolores" Candies.

Every music store in town featured an elaborate window. Banners and cutouts were used. Street car dashes were secured. Music stores advertised strongly in newspapers the number "Ramona." Several book stores devoted windows to the book.

This exploitation was used in addition, of course, to the usual newspaper, herald, posting and mail advertising. Also, the America presented the song film for one week in advance of the showing. Both organ and orchestra participated in presenting the song in connection with the "Ramona" advance trailer.

Co-features Local "Gang" and "Our Gang" on Special Bill

AN interesting novelty program in which a short comedy and a local "Gang" of entertainers were the features recently was put on with exceptionally gratifying results by the Rex Theatre in Spartansburg, S. C. The features of the bill were an "Our Gang" comedy on the screen and a stage show put on by "Red Dobson" and "his gang" of the Spartansburg high school.

The program was so richly spiced with a popular local angle that the management of the house found its publicity and exploitation practically written and done by local newspapers and the high school students.

The entertainment scored a popular success as an all comedy bill and an exhibition of the talent in Hollywood's comedy studios and the local institutions of learning.

The effect of the bill may be judged by the following quotations from an article reviewing the show in the Spartansburg Herald:

"'Red Dobson' and 'his gang' and Hal Roach's 'Our Gang' were rivals in an unusually fine program presented at the Rex Theatre last night. The first 'gang' was composed of members of the Spartansburg high school tumbling team, who tumbled and leaped and jumped and did everything else imaginable on mats for the audience. Nor was the audience unreciprocating, as it was plainly shown Mr. Dobson and his 'gang' by much applause it had fallen for them."

New Angle on Resemblance Contest in Cleveland

MANAGER ROY L. SMART of the Florida theatre, St. Petersburg—whose showmanship, by the way, is as consistently smart as the name borne by this live-wire manager—evolved an ingenious ballyhoo for his exploitation on "The Smart Set." At the great cost of a mere $5 bill he obtained three horses for an entire afternoon. Two of the animals were saddled and were ridden by young men in polo outfits. The third pony wore a white blanket on the sides of which were the following lines: "William Haines' Polo Ponies—Now Playing at the Florida."

THAT the state-wide Harmonica Playing Contest, now running in Texas, will prove out as the greatest exploitation for one group of two-reel comedies ever staged in that state, is assured, according to reports from Educational's exchange managers, who have been active in making the giant campaign a success. The contest started in April with local contests in numerous cities and towns. The finals are to be held in Dallas. Three of the largest chains in the state—Dent Theatres, Jefferson Amusement Co., and R. & R. Theatres—are co-operating in conducting the contests to name representatives. to go to the Dallas finals.

MANAGER T. Y. WALKER, of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., accomplished some excellent "goodwill" building and sent his showing of "The Drag Net" off to a flying start by entertaining the entire police force of Anniston with a special showing and a breakfast following the show. The police paraded to the theatre headed by the Mayor and the Chief of the department. The stunt got many columns of publicity for the picture and helped to cement a closer friendship between the civil authorities and the theatre.

MANAGER H. JERNBERG of the Province theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, made a special and highly successful bid for stronger matinee attendance by using two features daily. He presented recently "Topsy and Eva" at afternoon shows, the schedule being arranged so that a complete show was presented after school hours for children—with admissions for juveniles up to 14 years being 10 cents. The evening performance featured "Under the Tonto Rim" as a bid for the adult patronage of his town.

MANAGER CHARLES H. AMOS of the Riviera theatre in Knoxville, put a new [illegible] little stunt used in connection with his exploitation for "The Patent Leather Kid." One of Amos' ushers is credited with the idea of placing the hangers on automobiles as they passed slowly by. So the usher was given the job of putting his idea to work. He stationed himself at a street intersection in the downtown district and as cars were halted for traffic at the crossing, he slipped the hangers on the door handles of several cars.

LAST week witnessed the finals in the contest run at the Rialto theatre in Glens Falls, to determine the most perfect girl in that section of the state. The contest has gone over very well and attracted much attention.

"Starlight Promenade" Hot Weather Feature at Allston Theatre

NOT having the advantages of an up-to-date cooling system in his theatre, Manager L. I. Bearg of the Capitol theatre, Allston, Me., has installed a new policy that will keep his summer attendance above average.

The new policy is known as "The Starlight Promenade" and takes place between the showings of the two feature pictures.

An intermission of several minutes duration is held between the two pictures, which allows the patrons to go outside to an electrically illuminated space where tonic and cigarettes are distributed free of charge and where it is reasonably cool.

The tonic costs the theatre 65 cents a case and the cigarettes are furnished gratis by a local emporium for the publicity he derives from the stunt.

For those who do not care to go outside during intermission, an Ampico on the stage entertains the few remaining persons who would rather remain in their seats. The Ampico is also obtained free through a tie-up with one of the local piano concerns.

Parade of "Leaping Lenas" Drive Feature for "Harold Teen"

A PARADE of "Leaping Lenas" (of course, you know what they are—but if you don't, they are old style Ford cars) was the means of attracting general and very favorable notice to the showing of "Harold Teen" at the Garden theatre in Davenport, Ia., recently.

The exploitation was staged by Manager George M. Watson, whose parade became the talk of the town. Merchandise and cash awards as well as theatre tickets were offered for those driving the most rickety "Lena" in the parade.

The only qualifications to enter the parade was that the flivver be of an age beyond recognition and the more slogans painted on its surface the better.

"Miss Dolan," a dilapidated Ford relic of 1919 owned and operated in a miraculous manner by Clinton Dolan, was the winner of first prize in the contest. "Needs no top, covered by insurance," "What makes it run, Don't laugh it may be your Daughter" were some of the wisecracks displayed prominently in large painted letters on the sides and rear of the car which in some manner had eluded the tight-fisted hand of the junk dealer. The first-prize winner received $5.00 in cash.

Second prize, a slicker donated by the Syndicate Clothing Co., went to another local boy—Mason Sergeant who drove a Ford, minus half the steering apparatus, a few fenders and half the back seat. What was left was so badly bent, its original shape was left to the imagination. The prize smart sayings were painted on the side of this machine in bright red letters one of which was, "This car once owned by a Detroit millionaire."

In addition to having a splendid street ballyhoo parade at a nominal cost, the stunt gained increased newspaper publicity for Watson in two newspapers. They ran announcements in advance, and the day of the parade each paper assigned a reporter to cover it from a human interest angle. Photos were taken and published in the paper along with the story.

Stage Show Built Around Song Advance Selling for Picture

MANAGER CHAS. H. AMOS started advertising "Ramona" three weeks in advance from the stage at the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

A stage show was built around the song "Ramona" and every opportunity was taken advantage of in plugging the song.

A phonograph stunt was used one week in advance with the trailer with the special trailer being secured from the music publishers. The orchestra played the regular trailer and the Gene Austin phonograph records were synchronized with the special trailer.

During the showing of the special trailer, a cut-out of Dolores Del Rio in the proscenium box was illuminated with soft light.

Every music dealer in the city tied up on the picture with co-operative window displays showing life-size cutouts of Miss Del Rio and Warner Baxter.

Novel Display Feature of Exploitation for "Wine"

A novel display, depicting the title of the picture, was a feature of Manager Sam Hammond's exploitation for "Wine" at the Egyptian theatre, Greenville, S. C.

The lobby display consisted of trellis on both sides of the entrance and extending across the entire width of entrance. Artificial vines and clusters of grapes were twined in and around the trellis.

Puts On Novel Organ Act With Aid of Phonograph

A phonograph, auditorium type, placed at the disposal of Manager A. E. Fowler, for use in connection with his exploitation for "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" by a local dealer, was put to exceptionally effective use in staging an organ novelty at the Opera House, Bangor, Me., recently.

The phonograph was placed in an upper box directly under the organ chamber. Using a Jesse Crawford record and without any announcement, a spotlight was thrown on the organist who apparently commenced an organ solo. (Somewhere a Voice is Calling). Half way through the number, the organist arose and left the pit—the spotlight following him out and then going back to the organ console for a minute or so and then slowly moving up to the box. The curtains were then drawn disclosing the electrola.

Arranges Show Schedule to Suit Daylight Saving

A way to beat the daylight saving bugaboo has been discovered by E. J. Landsborough, manager of the Regent Theatre, Galt, Ontario.

Studying the time and sport situation locally, Mr. Landsborough discovered that twilight baseball games were generally concluded about 8.15, after which the people made their departure from the parks and were ready for other recreation. He therefore revised his theatre timetable so that the feature would not start until 8.30 and advertised this fact, suggesting that baseball patrons could see the feature after the games.

The change has made a big difference. Previously, Mr. Landsborough reported, the people would not enter the Regent theatre when they found that the feature had started.

Tennis Net Features Lobby Display for "Drag Net"

Manager Fred O. Slenker found another use for tennis nets besides on the tennis courts when he exploited "The Drag Net" at the Columbia Theatre, Davenport, Ia.

Cutout letters were placed across the nets carrying the following copy, "Look what we caught in The Drag Net for your entertainment next Saturday." Cutout heads of both Miss Brent and George Bancroft were also placed on the nets.

Signless Ballyhoo Man Hands Out Ad Cards

MANAGER JOHN McKENNA is of the opinion that a ballyhoo man can draw as much attention if not more—by not wearing signs on his back as was evidenced by the unusual amount of attention focussed on one of the ushers in exploiting Dressed to Kill," playing at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The usher wore a full-dress uniform including a silk plug hat and carried a cane. As he walked up and down the streets and into stores and other public places, he would pass out cards—the size of an ordinary calling card. Copy on the cards read, "Dressed to Kill, with Mary Astor, Edmund Lowe, Now Playing Imperial Theatre."

Key City Reports

New York City

WITH the exception of some very good showings made by a few theatres, the bad news continued along Broadway last week; in fact, excepting the new features which came to the first run houses, the preceding week's report would almost tell the story. Outside of the play the talkies are getting and a good week's business done by the Paramount there is nothing much to shout about. The talkies are commanding attention; there's no discounting that statement—and any time a Clara Bow picture comes to the Paramount good returns are the rule.

The Capitol gave "We Americans" (U) a tryout for a week after the picture had already been shown at the Colony theatre several weeks ago. This undoubtedly cut heavily into receipts for trade for the week was not at all satisfactory. Gilbert's "The Cossacks" followed in and promises to yield fine returns for the current week.

Business at the Roxy continued the downward trend the big house has been experiencing for a number of weeks. The picture used was "How to Handle Women" (U). Several Fox specials, awaiting their chance after two-a-day showings, are expected to go in soon. Evidently, they are being held for the still worse Summer weeks to come.

The best trade done along the Street was at the Paramount which had Clara Bow in "Ladies of the Mob" (Par.) and the Paul Ash stage act. Bow must be credited with the largest share of the good gate. The little lady is a prime favorite among this city's moviegoers; however, the Ash act rounded out the bill in excellent shape.

In the face of existing conditions the Strand management can have no great complaint to offer over the showing made by the combination bill of loud and silent drama. The silent picture offering was "Happiness Ahead" (F. N.) along with a number of talking shorts. Undoubtedly, the sound pictures have boosted business here.

Following a week's run at the Paramount "The Drag Net" (Par) went into the Rialto and got very good returns there last week. Up the street, "Ramona" (U. A.) finished its six weeks stay to pleasing business. All in all its run was a highly pleasing one. Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" followed in.

Among the two-a-days "Street Angel" (Fox) completed its stay at the Globe. This picture was well up in front at the finish and the entire run was financially satisfactory. "The Red Dance" (Fox, originally the Red Dancer) followed in with Movietone subjects. One local newspaper reviewer devoted fully seven eighths of his review to the Shaw Movietone reel.

About the same as stated the preceding week can be related for the past seven days on "The Trail of '98" (M-G-M) the Astor's offering. Not much doing—but still no announcement of what's to follow. At the Central all indications pointed toward the withdrawal of "The Man Who Laughs" (U) but U announced that this picture would be continued for two more weeks. Business just so-so.

Nearing a year's run, "Wings" (Par) at the Criterion continued to pull them in. Broadway's daddy film must be given plenty of credit. Another picture holding extremely well, in face of conditions, is "Tempest" (U. A.) at the Embassy. The Gaiety, with the hot Fox film "Fazil," is going at a fair pace. Reports have it that women like it better than the men.

Not a kick can the Warner Brothers make over the first week's showing of the Vitaphoned "Lion and the Mouse." And it's the same story from other key cities. Wherever the talkies are playing business is good. They are taking the play away from the other houses, sure enough. At the Times Square, Selwyn's "Dawn" continues to do good business; likewise, Hammerstein's with "The End of St. Petersburg." The little Cameo had a fair enough week with another importation, "The Station Master."

Kansas City

A STRONG line-up of pictures battled against a week of hot weather and won out in Kansas City last week, although the victory was by a small margin only. The lull following the national Republican Convention also had its bad effect upon the box offices. There was nothing out of the ordinary in the way of exploitation.

"Lady Be Good" at the Mainstreet drew well all week, the attendance having a larger percentage of younger people than usual.

At Loew's Midland Lon Chaney in "Laugh Clown Laugh" did unusually well, Chaney being popular here. The matinee business held up even better than was anticipated.

"No Other Woman" at the Pantages also had its appeal, the week's attendance being slightly better than normal for this time of the year.

Lionel Barrymore in the Vitaphone production, "The Lion and the Mouse," was held over another week at the Globe, and the move proved a good one, as business continued to hold up.

"The Big Killing," with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, played to good crowds at the Newman, both afternoons and nights.

At the Liberty "The Road To Ruin" continued to draw well from the younger element, the picture playing its third week.

Tampa

THE past week went over a little better all around than previous weeks. The weather was about the same, but the pictures seemed to have the "pull."

The Victory finished a ten-day run of "The Lion and the Mouse." Business held up fine for the entire run, demonstrating again the hold "talkies" have on Tampa.

"The Drag Net" was an excellent card for the Tampa and boosted the receipts well over the same period of last week. For the last half they had Adolphe Menjou, a Tampa favorite, in "His Tiger Lady," which went over good. A very satisfactory week.

The Strand had a fine Sunday with "The Vamping Venus" but Monday dropped a little. "Harold Teen," featured the following three days, did nicely. This picture would probably have shown up better had the "comic strip" been known locally.

"Ladies of the Night Club" drew about average for the last two days.

Business at the Franklin has been improving since they inaugurated the morning matiness. "Modern Mothers" and "The Little Buckaroo" were the first runs used this week, and "Laugh, Clown Laugh" and "The Legion of the Condemned" the second runs. All four of the features brought in very good returns.

Chicago

STRONG attractions at the Chicago and Oriental, made improved business at these theatres the feature of Chicago's downtown situation last week. Al Kvale returned to the Oriental as stage band leader and his large following turned out in force to welcome him and another Oriental favorite, Milton Watson. "Half a Bride" was the screen feature.

"Happiness Ahead" with a Chicago favorite Colleen Moore as the star and Miss Universe in person, together with a good stage bill, did well at the Chicago.

McVickers closed its run of "The Strange Case of Captain Ramper" business being only fair, and the Roosevelt also was showing its feature "The Dragnet" for the last week, attendance holding up normally.

Another feature to end an extended showing was "Ramona," which has enjoyed good box office reports during its season at United Artists Theatre.

"The Lion and the Mouse," with Vitaphone, continued to go strong, at the Orpheum.

The Marbro and Granada had "Walking Back" as their feature picture, both houses continuing to offer specially strong stage attractions, Leon Errol appearing in person at the Granada and Jack Osterman at the Marbro, and satisfactory box office reports were made by both theatres.

"Laugh, Clown Laugh," on the screen at the Uptown with Belle Baker in person, as well as the big stage attractions, proved a strong combination.

At the Tivoli, "Sadie Thompson" on the screen and Bennie Kreuger's stage show, did well.

Average attendance was enjoyed by the Avalon, which had "Partners in Crime" as its feature, Roy Dietrich and his band heading the stage program.

The Capitol also did a normal business with "Harold Teen" on the screen and Dell Lampe, acting as band master and master of ceremonies.

Milwaukee

A RAINY week end followed by a few days of perfect summer weather combined to put theatre business in Milwaukee a bit below par last week.

The Wisconsin offered an unusually strong program headed by "Lady, Be Good," and succeeded in drawing average houses.

The Riverside enjoyed very good patronage throughout the week, with "Chinatown Charlie."

The Garden was fairly well attended, but the picture "Tenderloin" hardly received the exploitation it merited and consequently business was not as active as it should have been.

"The Last Laugh" went well at the Alhambra and the theatre was well attended.

"Sailors' Wives" drew fairly well at the Merrill.

The Orpheum bill was augmented by "Marry the Girl" and was a popular number on the bill.

"No Other Woman" was fairly successful in bringing in patronage at the Strand.

Neighborhood theatres did moderately well this past week. "The Showdown" was the attraction at the five Midwesco prerelease houses and business at all was just fair.

"Speedy" did good business at the Colonial, Milwaukee and National theatres.

"The Skyscraper" was fairly successful at the Venetian

Atlanta

BUSINESS in Atlanta theatres dropped low last week, partly because of the menu offered and the weather called for the swimming pools.

Crook melodrama had the week and many Atlanta patrons are beginning to wonder whether or not there are other types of pictures being made. They are experiencing signs of indigestion in the entertainment realms and are calling for a change of bill.

At the Howard George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent played in the "Drag Net," a thoroughly able and well produced picture, but unfavorable to the box-office. The young contingent cannot "see" this type of the "I-don't-care" girl or the hard boiled man, plus the crooks and crooks. Due praise but no crowds.

Next door, at Loew's Grand, M-G-M's comedy team, Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, tried to get away with a farce on gangland in "Detectives." Tried, but failed. Poor box-office.

Monte Blue and Betty Bronson in "Brass Knuckles" brought the Capitol only fair receipts.

Keith's Georgia offered Bebe Daniels in "Fifty-Fifty Girl," not wholly a crook melodrama, but set in a background of complicated plots and schemes. Drew in fair audiences.

The Metropolitan enjoyed a good week with Richard Barthelmess in "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," while the Rialto flopped with "The Vanishing Pioneer," a mediocre western.

Three first run westerns, "Hearts of Men," "Hound of Silver Creek," and "Flying Cowboy," got over the top at the Tudor.

Five second runs and "The Nest," with Pauline Fredericks, brought the usual flying colors for the New Alamo.

Baltimore

WITH cool weather predominating throughout the week beginning Monday, June 18, combined with clouds and rain at intervals, business for the first-run picture theatres here was good, as the inclement weather had a tendency to drive people into the playhouses.

The best business of the week was probably done at Warners' Metropolitan, where "The Lion and the Mouse," co-starring Lionel Barrymore and May McAvoy, was presented with Vitaphone sound and dialogue accompaniment. This picture will be held for an indefinite run there.

Next in line for very good business was Loew's Century, where "Steamboat Bill, Jr.," starring Buster Keaton with Ernest Torrence, proved a hit with audiences. This was on the same program with a presentation act entitled "Sunny Skies," with Ted Claire acting as master of ceremonies, with other vaudeville favorites.

Although a fairly good business was done by the Stanley throughout the week, with "The Street of Sin," starring Emil Jannings, it is understood that the majority of those who saw the picture did not think it up to the high standard that the German player has set for himself. "In Dutch" was the stage attraction, with Pep Kaufman acting as master of ceremonies.

"Siegfried," the UFA production, started out fair at the Little Theatre during its second week there, presented by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., at that 250-seat house, but after a fine review appeared in the Evening Sun, Tuesday, business gradually mounted, and the week in its entirety proved an excellent one.

"Freckles," the film adaptation of Gene Stratton Porter's story, proved a good attraction at the Keith-Albee Hippodrome, where five acts of family-time vaudeville were offered on the same bill. Business proved better than it has been at that playhouse.

Loew's Valencia did a fine business on D. W. Griffith's latest production, "Drums of Love," featuring Lionel Barrymore, Mary Philbin and Don Alvarado.

"Love and Learn," starring Esther Ralston, was the feature film attraction at the Keith-Albee Garden, where six acts of high-class vaudeville were offered on the same bill. Business was good during the week. Clara Kimball Young was the headliner on the vaudeville bill.

Cincinnati

JUST as all roads led to Rome in the olden days, so did all roads, local at least, lead to the Albee Theatre during the past week. The attraction which brought forth the natives in huge numbers was Gilda Gray in person, aided and abetted by Amerique and Neville, plus a troupe of agile dancing girls in a lavish stage revue. The shimmying Gilda was also seen on the screen in "The Devil Dancer." Many times during the engagement there were long lines in front of the box-office, and the week, in all, was like the answer to an exhibitor's prayer.

"We Americans" at Keith's got off to a good start, and the customers continued to come steadily throughout the week.

The Capitol, featuring Vitaphone and Movietone, got by nicely, although the screen feature, "The Patsy," was recently played on the stage here by a stock company, and this may have somewhat slowed down the attendance.

Beery and Hatton, in "The Big Killing," was well patronized at the Lyric, although no one was killed in the rush.

"The Magnificent Flirt," at the Strand, was accorded good houses during the greater part of the run.

"Stop That Man," the feature at the Family for the first half, did well, but didn't break any attendance records. "Slightly Used," for the last half, had about the same record.

Taken as a whole, however, the week was satisfactory, especially as compared with business for the past few weeks.

Dallas

"THE Yellow Lily" with Billie Dove brought only fair crowds to the Palace. For the last several weeks the Palace has been unable to keep up their high average. However, the return of Lou Forbes as director of the Palace stage band next week should boost things, as Lou has a good following in Dallas.

At the Majestic, "Honor Bound," with George O'Brien and Estelle Taylor, brought good receipts for the seven-day run, and this looks good considering conditions at other first-run houses. The Majestic has maintained a good average with very few breaks for quite a long time.

The Melba, showing "The Actress," starring Norma Shearer, did not vary from the fairly good business of last week. The Melba having been the most eccentric theatre in Dallas is now in the business groove, for the past four weeks show that the difference in receipts for the different weeks is very small, and business has been on the safe side of the ledger, which means a great deal for the new Publix venture.

"Across the Atlantic," with Monte Blue, increased the Capitol receipts over those of the past few weeks, which have not been so good. Business appeared to be steady, with no unusual big or small performances.

At the Old Mill, "The Fighting Eagle," with Rod La Rocque, brought fair receipts for the week and turned the patrons away well pleased. Business at the Old Mill has been satisfactory for the past several weeks.

At the Arcadia, "The Patent Leather Kid," with Richard Barthelmess, and "The Smart Set," with William Haines, brought good business for the week, although a little under the past few weeks.

Philadelphia

BUSINESS in the downtown theatres in Philadelphia resumed its normal trend after the boost given to box-office receipts by the Stanley Company's widely advertised Jubilee Week.

"Ramona," originally scheduled for two weeks at the Aldine, after an exceptionally good first week's business of $13,500 gross, continued to draw the crowds, the gross for the second week being $12,500, and was held over for a third week.

The Stanley, with Marion Davies in "The Patsy," Walter Woolf in person and a stage show, "Radio Nights," had a satisfactory week.

"Don't Marry," with Lois Moran and an excellent surrounding bill, featuring the Royal Welsh Gleemen, "Ukelele Ike," Clark & McCullough, and Evans & Mayer, brought good business to the Fox.

"Mother Machree" has failed to make good at the Fox-Locust, but will be retained there for another week. This house will be closed for the summer on June 30th.

Emil Jannings in the "Street of Sin" had a fairly good week at the Karlton, but the picture has not shown the drawing power of other Jannings films.

The Carman, with the first Philadelphia showing of "Name the Woman," and a lively revue, "Campus Capers," featuring the Temple University Orchestra, with a clever aggregation of singers, dancers and comedians, had a good week, considering the season.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh," with Lon Chaney at the Stanton, which was extensively tied up with the Victor Distributing companies and various local music stores, did fairly well.

The Palace, with "Across to Singapore," the Arcadia, with Richard Dix in "Easy Come, Easy Go," and the Victoria, with "The Enemy," all had rather mediocre weeks.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE attendance at the downtown theatres of this city has been very good with cool weather conditions prevailing, which perhaps added to the favorable box office receipts.

"Tenderloin" at the Victory theatre has been held over for the second week, in conjunction with the Vitaphone, and continued to break records at this house.

Esther Ralston and Gary Cooper in "Half a Bride" played to crowded houses at the Capitol theatre, which also offered the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation "Moscow Idea," featuring Maxwell and Lee, and which was a good deal of a drawing card also.

John Gilbert and Renee Adoree in "Honor First" were well received at the Pantages theatre in connection with the regular vaudeville performance, and capacity houses were the general rule here last week.

The feature picture offered at the Paramount Empress theatre was "The Wheel of Chance" with Richard Barthelmess, and satisfactory results were reported.

Mary Philbin and Ivan Mosjukine in "Surrender" at the American theatre drew fairly good crowds to this large house.

The Gem theatre enjoyed a successful week during their run of "For Wives Only," featuring Marie Prevost, this production having proved to be a good drawing card.

The Rialto theatre presented the second run of "Sadie Thompson" with very satisfactory results.

"The Light in the Window" and also "The Valiant Rider" were the week's feature presentations at the new State this past week, and good business has been the rule.

Billie Dove in "The Love Mart" brought fairly good sized houses to the Tower theatre, a neighborhood houses.

Cleveland

"TENDERLOIN," the first of the sustained talking movies to be shown here, easily walked off with first honors so far as business was locally concerned last week. As a whole, business was "off." Sultry weather with daily showers, and a flock of just average pictures combined to lower the previous week's record.

"Tenderloin" played to big houses at the Stillman. Undoubtedly, novelty had much to do with the large attendance. It is entertaining on its own score without the talking sequences, which, however, add greatly to the interest.

"Detectives," very good comedy with clever titles, is good entertainment, and under normal conditions, should do big business. It did fairly well at the State.

Keith's Palace had a good week when it was expected to do capacity, with "The Fifty-Fifty Girl," a moderately entertaining picture. The personal appearance of Jeanne Eagels in extracts from "Rain" and "Her Cardboard Lover" attracted large attendance.

"The Street of Sin" as shown at the Allen, suffered from the censor board shears, and business suffered proportionally. The picture was not liked as well as previous Janning productions. Undoubtedly much of the dissatisfaction with the picture was due to censor eliminations.

"The Four Flusher," pleasant light and wholesome entertainment, failed to do much business at Reade's Hippodrome.

"Honor Bound," melodramatic, has plenty of thrills and did nice business at Keith's East 105th St. theatre.

The Park did fairly well with first run neighborhood runs of "Drums of Love" and "Burning Daylight."

"Telling the World" did very well at the Cameo its second downtown run. Neighborhood houses are complaining.

New Orleans

DOWNTOWN theatre business showed a marked improvement over the past week. A general depression without any diagnosed reason has been felt all through the city for the past few weeks but with excellent weather prevailing managers are optimistic that better days are not far distant. Not only have the theatres suffered but other forms of entertainment as well.

The outstanding business in New Orleans was done at the new Saenger theatre where the world premiere of "Telling the World," starring Wliliam Haines, was shown. The picture was extensively advertised and exploited by the Saenger publicity department. A special showing of the picture was arranged for local newspaper men and considerable extra publicity space was given to the picture. The house played to capacity business practically every evening during the week while matinee attendance was light.

Right on the heels of the new Saenger for first honors was the Loew State Theatre, its across the street neighbor. The State featured Sydney Chaplin in "Skirts," coupled with five Broadway acts of vaudeville that made the entire show a winner.

"On Your Toes," the Orpheum theatre film feature with Reginald Denny, was fine entertainment and the house was well attended all week. The stage bill was a good one and this helped matters for Manager Vannah Taylor's house.

The Strand Theatre got a lot of business with "Forbidden Hours," with Ramon Navarro and Renee Adoree. This team is popular with local theatregoers and the house that plays them is bound to draw.

The Liberty Theatre showed Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Finders Keepers," starring Laura LaPlante and was liked by those who attended.

"Half a Bride," with Esther Ralston, had its premiere elsewhere in the city but the Globe Theatre drew well and reported an excellent week's business.

Neighborhood houses continue to report business as being excellent, especially the Carrollton, Capitol, Tivoli, Rivoli, Mecca, Gaiety, Casino and others.

Within another week New Orleans will have its first opportunity to see and hear a Vitaphone presentation, when Saenger's new Tudor theatre, rebeautified, redecorated and equipped with an air-washed ventilating system throws open its doors. As the first Vitaphone picture the management has selected "Glorious Betsy," starring Conrad Nagel and Dolores Costello.

The public parks, City and Audubon, both have mammoth swimming pools and are attracting thousands daily. The parks also offer free open air entertainment, including motion pictures and vaudeville.

Albany

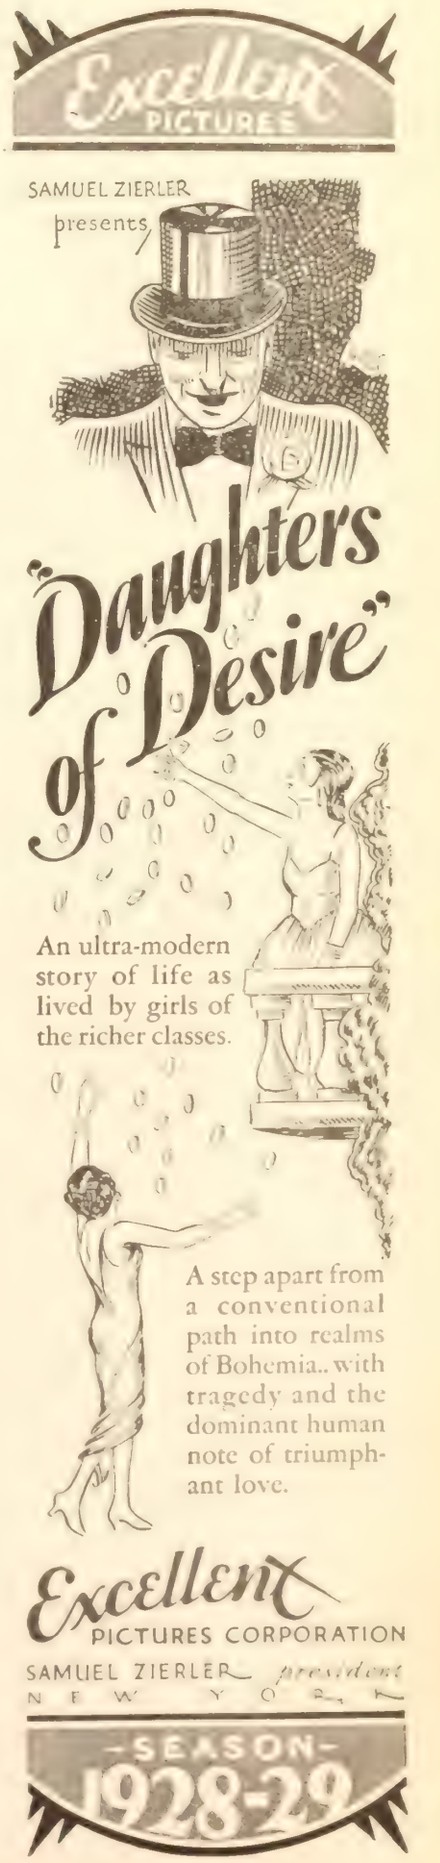
IT rained all last week in Albany, but every rain drop brought a corresponding penny to the box offices of the motion picture theatres, with the result that many of the houses reported business that was almost up to the winter months. With automobile going unpleasant, the people just naturally turned to the motion picture theatres for their amusement and recreation.

The Mark Strand, using Dolores Costello in "Tenderloin," opened big on Monday and ran to winter business throughout the week, matinees being good, while the evening crowds formed lines that stretched into the street.

At the Leland, Dolores Del Rio in "No Other Woman" demonstrated beyond the possibility of any doubt that she can hold her own with any of the other screen stars when it comes to bringing business to a theatre. For instance, the business at the Leland on Tuesday ran to better than $300 over that of the corresponding day the previous week. The theatre was packed each night and the picture went over far better from an attendance standpoint, than "Hangman's House" and a lot of others.

The Mark Ritz did only fair business with "Hell Ship Bronson," but this was probably due more to the type of picture shown than anything else.

The Clinton Square theatre, using "A Thief in the Dark" and "Stage Kisses," held up in fine shape throughout the week.



At Harmanus Bleecker Hall, the combination of vaudeville and pictures seems to be bringing the people while at Proctor's Grand, William Boyd in "The Night Flyer" served to hold up the picture end of the program and gave satisfaction.

Some of the residential houses were inclined to complain over business.

In the neighboring city of Troy, Dolores Del Rio in "Ramona" brought the biggest business to the Troy theatre last week since last February, when "The Jazz Singer" came mighty near setting a house record for the theatre. It was noticeable last week that "Ramona" brought crowds of the older people to the matinees and this served to hold up the attendance at afternoon shows, the evening shows taking care of themselves.

The Lincoln had absolutely no kick whatever in the business done for the first four days with Marion Davies in "The Patsy," the blonde star not only packing the house but having the crowds standing each night. It was just the sort of picture that Troy liked. On the last three days of the week "Ladies of the Night Club" proved nearly as acceptable, judging from box office figures.

At Proctor's Troy house, Pola Negri in "The Three Sinners" was used to advantage. The smaller theatres in Troy are complaining that business is not holding up as well as a year ago.

Harrisburg, Pa.

A SOLID week of rain, including some very sultry days, reduced the amount of business done in the theatres as compared with the cool weeks earlier in June when exceptional results were obtained for this time of year.

Managers say business, which had held up unusually well due to the late, cool Spring, has declined now to about normal for the summer season.

The outstanding picture of the week was "The Street of Sin," featuring Emil Jannings and Fay Wray, at the Victoria, where perhaps more than average sized summer crowds were in attendance all week. Critics and patrons generally pronounced this a strong play.

Ramon Novarro and Renee Adoree were shown on the screen at Loew's Regent in "A Certain Young Man," with a considerable degree of success, appealing particularly to the feminine patronage.

At the Colonial, Johnny Hines' breezy comedy, "Home Made," achieved fair financial results.

At the State the last three days of the week Dolores Del Rio, in "No Other Woman," proved very acceptable entertainment.

The National, a neighborhood house that recently installed a pipe organ, did fair Friday and Saturday business with Tom Mix in "The Arizona Wildcat."

The Russell put on a double bill, for Saturday only, consisting of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," With Julia Swayne Gordon and Ralph Ince, and "Ambushed," starring Bob Reeves.

The Broad Street showed Rin Tin Tin in 'The Dog of the Regiment,' and the Grand offering was "Prince of Headwaiters," with Lewis Stone.

Portland

A WEEK of warm weather made a slight reduction in attendance at the first run theatres, but due to the excellence of the offerings at the big first run houses, they did a little better than average business.

"Ramona" opened at The Columbia to good business due in part to the popularity of the well-read book, Dolores herself who has considerable following here, and to the popular song "Ramona" as rendered by both organ and Sampietro and his orchestra. It overshadowed all other selections in the musical score. The screen version will doubtless run a second week.

Georgie Stoll was liberal with his violin solos at "The Broadway" last week, giving two out of the fifty-six which he has been requested to play during the coming weeks. The Fanchon & Marco show gave a novelty number well done, "Divine Venus Idea." Woods Miller, baritone sang the theme and the dance numbers were executed by Arlene Langan. Billie Dove in "The Yellow Lily" appealed to both large matinee and evening crowds, especially to June couples. Fox movietone news and an entertaining organ number by Melville Ogden rounded out a good bill.

Heading the Vitaphone bill at the "Blue Mouse" was a Portland favorite, Eddie Peabody, the banjo boy who has already made two visits here at The Broadway to good business. Other acts were Hugh Herbert in "The Lemon" and Earl Burnett's orchestra in three numbers were applauded. "The Hut" was the Movietone Act.

Irene Rich in "Powder My Back" drew fairly well.

Josef Srodka's orchestra continues to make many musical friends at Tebbetts Oriental, and they scored with their medley number "Life on the Ocean" used to advantage with old time sea songs to accompany "The Wreck of the Hesperus." This appealed to the younger generation, as also did the musical offering of Glenn Shelly at the Wurlitzer, who gave "Zampa." Fair box office receipts.

Harry Linden and Phil Lampkin continue to charm with their many musical menus at "The Portland," and Phil exhibited with marked success "Steps and Steppers" with Glenn & Jenkins, while Harry composed the "Rose" overture which included "Wild Irish Rose" "Roses of Picardy' and the like. George Bancroft in "The Drag Net" proved popular, and withal the house should have done much better and brought out larger attendance during the sultry afternoons. The night attendance was good.

It is reported that surburban houses in some outlying sections are dropping prices to 15c top. Summer vacations are commencing which will have a tendency to lower attendance.

Pittsburgh

BUSINESS was but average in most of the theatres. The first half of the week saw heavy rains, and the last few days were too warm.

Loew's Penn was the only house that had a really good week's business with "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," which scored a big hit. The Loew-Publix Unit Show, "Seeing Things," was one of the best yet shown here.

The Stanley had an average week with Colleen Moore in "Happiness Ahead." The stage presentation was "The Streets of New York."

The Davis and Regent played "Tillie's Punctured Romance" to disappointing business. Proved to be but a fair program comedy.

The Grand had "Walking Back," which was a delightful screen entertainment, and business was just average.

"Honor Bound" held the screen at the Olympic, and went over fairly well with the fans, but the box-office receipts were just average.

The Cameraphone did a nice week's business with "The Garden of Eden," another picture that scored with the press and fans alike.

The Liberty did average business with "The Drag Net."

The Olympic and Regent theatres were closed last Saturday night because of poor business. Both are Stanley first run houses.

Indianapolis

BUSINESS continued to disappoint the majority of Indianapolis theatres last week. Box office receipts was off as a result of summer depression and weather conditions.

Lillian Gish in "The Enemy" and Mort Harris's stage presentation "Flying Frolics" ended the week at the Palace with fair business.

The Indiana business picked up some due to the First Anniversary Celebration. Gary Cooper and Florence Vidor starred in "Broken Dreams" the film attraction. Charlie Davis' stage band was augmented by a college orchestra making seventy-six persons in the "First Anniversary Revue," the stage presentation.

"Roof Garden Revue," with Dick Powell, master of ceremonies, starring in the show drew fair results at the Circle. Dolores Del Rio, in "The Gateway of the Moon," was the film.

Pola Negri in "Three Sinners" and Vitaphone acts drew fairly satisfactory business at the Apollo.

George Sidney and Charlie Murray in "Flying Romeos" was at the Ohio, with fair attendance. Fritzi Ridgway, well known to Indianapolis audiences as the wife of Constantine Bakaleinikoff, former Circle orchestra director, was a drawing card for the Ohio film.

Neighborhood houses reported average business for the week.

Ottawa

PICTURE honors were rather well divided in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of June 18, and despite the hot days patronage could be considered satisfactory at three of the principal theatres. There were no counter-attractions around town during the seven days, the most startling events being the annual Sunday school picnics.

"Drums of Love" was an outstanding feature at the Regent Theatre, and there were standing patrons every evening, with matinees well patronized as well. The theme was colorful and the acting quite up to the mark. The Paramount News had one of its best issues.

There were many who preferred "No Other Woman," starring Dolores Del Rio, at B. F. Keith's Theatre, and business was substantial here also. The Fox News was also one of the sparkling bits of the week's bill.

"Hangman's House" created a fine impression among the fans at the Centre Theatre, this picture being one of the best of the week locally.

"Easy Come, Easy Go," with Richard Dix, was somewhat of a disappointment at the Imperial Theatre, because of the farcical acting, and "The Virgin Queen," in colors, saved the show. Crowds were fair. The colored picture and the other short subjects gave the people their money's worth.

The Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec, had a very fair attraction in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." It was a type of picture that is well liked by the French-speaking crowds.

Without exception the neighborhood theatres in Ottawa gave lengthy bills and they had the desired effect of drawing good summer crowds.

The Columbia Theatre presented "The Black Diamond Express"; a chapter of "Masked Menace"; a comedy; a news weekly and a couple of vaudeville acts. Good community patronage also took in the big bill at the Rex Theatre, consisting of "Hero on Horseback"; an instalment of "Trail of Tiger"; a comedy and a topical film.

San Francisco

AS school vacation and warm weather has set in, theatre attendance has not been as good as a few weeks ago, although business, generally, in the several houses, is considered as good as it can be for this time of the year. The larger motion picture theatres have put extra good presentation acts on their stages in order to induce the crowds to attend.

There was some talk of Daylight saving in San Francisco, but to the joy of the theatre men, it was not put through, partly through their efforts and because most of the men of influence proved no value would come from this idea in this section.

Loew's Warfield theatre did better than any in the city. In fact its business was considered good enough for days when the motion picture game is at its height. "Harold Teen" was shown on the screen and Fanchon & Marco's presentation, "Radion Tele-Vision," together with Rube Wolfe, leading his band, drew crowds all week.

"Sunrise,' shown on the screen at the St. Francis theatre for a third week did an average business for this time of the year. The picture itself was well thought of by the majority.

"The Big Noise," shown at the Granada theatre, together with the Publix Revue of "Milady's Fans," in which 30 and a star participated, did only a comparatively small business.

"Buck Privates at the Golden Gate, together with vaudeville acts, did a good business as did the Union Square theatre which featured, "Back To Liberty," "Newlyweds Friend" and vaudeville acts.

Opinions on Pictures

The Cossacks

Colorful Enough—With Gilbert to Help It

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WITH a colorful title adorning an adventurous romantic story and starring John Gilbert in a first rate characterization this film couldn't possibly go wrong. It may not have the original thought of Tolstoy in it—the thought built around mental torture and misgivings, but it spells romance in large doses of action, which is fair enough.

Gilbert has Renee Adoree for the love interest. With her supporting him he catches something of the spark which has been lost since "The Big Parade." They bicker and quarrel but in the end he earns the right to be called a cossack. Having no taste for bloodshed he is forced to overcome his inferiority by slaughtering a Turk or three or more. The Tolstoy "message" is not grasped, but why look for the mental side when there is so much physical appeal?

Gilbert shades the role with fine understanding, jumping from a meek youth to a swaggering hero with an emotional flair that should bring the girls to the box-office window. It is well cast with Ernest Torrence, Dale Fuller and Nils Asther fitting right into the scheme of things.

Drawing Power: Title, star and Adoree. For all houses, large and small. Exploitation Angles: Feature star and Adoree reunited after "Big Parade." Use Russian themes for music. Put on Russian prologue. Bill as red hot romance of Russian steppes.

THEME: Romantic drama of humble, meek cossack youth who develops into a fighter and wins his girl.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Length, seven reels. Released June 23, 1928. The Cast: John Gilbert, Ernest Torrence, Renee Adoree, Dale Fuller, Mary Alden, Josephine Borio, Neil Neely, Joseph Wari, Paul Hurst. Director, George Hill.

The Foreign Legion

A Little Late, But Fair Enough

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE spirit of "Beau Geste" is still being felt among screen stories. The latest entry to project the soldiers of fortune down Morocco way is a fair picture as to plot and a good picture as to acting. The idea presents a self-sacrificing Englishman who joins the Legion to protect the French husband of the girl who jilted him.

After a time lapse they meet again and trouble brews between the erstwhile sweethearts, but it evaporates when real romance enters the hero's life. In the telling of the story there is released some good melodrama, and it carries a pleasant romantic flavor which makes it easy to absorb.

The acting is very capably taken care of by Lewis Stone, Norman Kerry and Mary Nolan. It should please most of the boys and girls.

Drawing Power: O. K. for average houses. Exploitation Angles: Bill as picture of the famous French Foreign Legion. Play up Lewis Stone and Norman Kerry.

THEME: Romantic drama of self-sacrifice.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Length, six reels. Released, June, 1928. The Cast: Norman Kerry, Lewis Stone, Mary Nolan, June Marlowe, Crauford Kent, Walter Perry. Director, Edward Sloman.

The Red Dance

Not So Big, But Should Attract Them

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE Russian Revolution is a titanic theme and the Russians are a race which cannot be captured in celluloid when the design is to bring forth the conflict and torment of soul. The trouble here is an effort to paint peasant life, the aristocracy, the uprising of the proletariat and dovetail seething action in the conflict of the mind. It is a large order and naturally fails.

Trotsky is shown in thin disguise when he, in reality, was living in New York during the throes of the Revolution. And after shots of court intrigue, the film jumps about from one scene to another until it strikes romance. Then it reverses a favorite formula. Instead of showing a lowly peasant in love with an heiress or princess, the idea shows a Grand Duke charmed by a daughter of the working classes. And before it ends it carries on a three ring circus of incident, intrigue, adventure, and other seething elements. Revolutions aren't accomplished in a pell-mell fashion, though they are permissible to translate action. The fault in the story is digression from its subject to encompass about everything pertaining to the downfall of Russia. Director Walsh has given it a fine mounting, the detail being exceptionally good. And several of his shots carry imagination. His cast is first rate without showing any real inspiration. Charles Farrell fails to capture the Russian spirit and Dolores del Rio is not emotional enough in her big moments. Both do creditable work, however. Ivan Linow is fair but his comedy needs control. He is not a funny man.

It's a big effort, painstakingly done but lacking depth and feeling and inspiration in its telling.

Drawing Power: Has popularity of Farrell and del Rio to work on. Also the wave of Russian pictures. O. K. for bigger houses. Exploitation Angles: Feature principals. Stage prologue of Russian atmosphere, etc. Bill as drama of overthrow of Russian monarchy. Feature solo dancer.

THEME: Drama of Russian Revolution with romance interwoven detailing love of Grand Duke and peasant.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Length, 9,250 feet. Released, Dec. 3, 1928. The Cast: Dolores del Rio, Charles Farrell, Ivan Linow, Boris Charsky, Dorothy Revier, Andre Segurola, Dimitri Alexis. Director, Raoul Walsh.

The Magnificent Flirt

Fairly Entertaining, But Well Done

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS one is aimed apparently in capturing feminine audiences. Since the ladies are in the majority, as picturegoers, it should have a particular appeal. They will see a very fine production, one neatly mounted and catering a deal to a fashion layout. Yet it has a quality which should bring out the men folk, too.

The idea exploits the modern touch in presenting a jazzy mother and her ingenue daughter, and affords Florence Vidor an opportunity to wear some dazzling gowns and exercise her exceptional poise and restraint. It isn't much of an idea and looms up as pretty slender material to carry on for feature length. But the star, the supporting cast and the production put it over very creditably. The settings are something to make a fuss over and so is the camera work. A counter love interest keeps pace with the major romance. It's a pleasant tidbit for summer business.

Drawing Power: Should attract with title. Exploitation Angles: Play up gowns and fashion display. Feature Florence Vidor. Capitalize the title and tease it.

THEME: Comedy-drama of romantic mother and her equally romantic daughter.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, June 2, 1928. The Cast: Florence Vidor, Albert Conti, Loretta Young, Matty Kemp, Marietta Millner, Ned Sparks. Director, Harry d'Arrast.

"Felix the Cat in Outdoor Indore"

(Educational—One Reel)

THE lone cat traverses the watery spaces to find an elephant in India and after many difficulties brings him back home. He and the elephant put on an act in a circus and win the plaudits of the crowd.

It is fairly good entertainment. But it is noticeable that the stories supplied Felix lately have let down in cleverness and their surprising skill in laugh invention.

The fact remains, however, that the cat is still the appealing little cartoon character—a character who has more individuality about him and more little quirks and mannerisms than the other cartoon figures have revealed.

Like many of his Hollywood rivals in the flesh, Felix needs good stories just now.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Pathe Review No. 28"

(Pathe—One Reel)

A DIVERSIFIED [illegible] Review issue, this single-reeler contains the subjects. The Street of the Stars, a reel presentation showing the movie haunts of New York's Gay White Way from the sky. "It Must Be the Weather," showing antics of some Broadway show girls at play on a secluded spot. "From Davis Under the Spanish Main," underwater camera scenes taken fathoms deep down in the sea of rare fish specimens. The highlight of the film is the subject "Dove Fishers Seine the Sky," Basque bird hunters set nets across the Pyrrenees mountain air lanes, and in this manner trap their food.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

Lonesome

A Slight Story Deftly Handled

(Reviewed by Ray Murray)

ALL whose individual efforts contributed to the finished production of "Lonesome," share in a collective achievement, for the picture is well directed, splendidly photographed and delightfully played.

The lonesome ones are a girl named Mary and a boy named Jim. Mary is a telephone operator and regardless of the flock of "hello girls" she knows—she is lonesome. Jim runs a punch press in a large mill and is acquainted with a lot of fellows—but he is lonesome, too. Each live in a furnished room and neither of them know of the existence of the other—and with the coming of a half holiday, Saturday afternoon, neither of them have anything better to do than to return to their respective rooms.

A passing band wagon with a jazz band going full tilt attracts Jim's attention. The ballyhoo announces a gala day at an amusement park. The wagon also plays outside Mary's window, and she, too, becomes inspired to go somewhere. Ultimately, each lonely one arrives at the beach. By chance they become acquainted. The afternoon is spent on the sands and in the water and evening finds them still together enjoying rides and numerous amusement park concessions. On one of the rides they become separated in a seething crowd. Jim tries desperately to find Mary, and Mary searches for Jim. Both go back to their rooms — desolate — lonely — sorrowful —for neither of them know the other's full name or address. However, before the night is over, they are reunited and the delightful way in which this happens serves as a clever surprise twist.

Glenn Tryon scores heavily as Jim and Barbara Kent in the role of Mary is refreshing. The entire production, supervised by Carl Laemmle, Jr., is worthy of favorable comment and Gilbert Warrenton's camera work is outstanding. The titles are in keeping. Tom Reed wrote them and Edward T. Lowe is responsible for the very human document known as the story.

Drawing Power: Apt to meet with favor in any theatre.

THEME: The agony of loneliness.

Produced and Distributed by Universal. Released, 1928. Length, 6,193 feet. The Cast: Glenn Tryon, Barbara Kent, Fay Holderness, Eddie Phillips, Gustav Tartos, Fred Esmelton. Directed by Paul Fejos. Story and Continuity by Edward T. Lowe. Photography by Gilbert Warrenton.

"Ladies Preferred"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ONE of the zippiest and peppiest comedies to rear its head in a long time is this one, starring Jerry Drew. This dapper comedian, cut out in sartorial splendor, with the polite manners and individual technique, is mighty effective. He is a comer, beyond a doubt, and he gives every assurance that his new series, the Ideal Comedies, will swing the laugh pendulum vigorously. In "Ladies Preferred," he has been given a fine shove forward. Given the proper material he ought to glide rapidly toward the winning goal. His only rival in this matter of polite comedy is Charlie Chase. Jerry is straining at the leash right now; give him a chance and he will be making a race of it with Chase.

Yes sir, your enthusiasm is aroused with this one. A neat and trim number, it tells of Jerry, a would-be Lothario, and his adventures with the ladies. Speaking of these latter individuals, Lucille Hutton and Estelle Bradley, they are provocatively pretty and talented in the bargain. They supply all the lure and charm that would drive any poor male after them. Jerry succumbs, and a triangle or quadrangle is the result. To make the story short, Jerry is quite a flop as the gallant wooer.

The breezy direction can be credited to Charles Lamont. The support consists of Robert Burns and Stanley Blystone.

"The Gold Claim"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by George J. Reddy)

THIS Universal subject does not vary much from the usual mediocre type of Western story, and depends mostly for its appeal, on a goodly amount of action. The offering is brightened by a colorful mountainous background, and will prove fair entertainment.

John Sparks, a "framed" fugitive from justice, works a gold claim in the back hills with his pretty daughter, Jean, who does not know of her father's past. Jim Warde, a neighboring rancher in love with the girl, wins the enmity of Mel Sinclaire, an objectionable character, when he forcibly defends the girl against his attentions. Jean's father is threatened with exposure by the infuriated Sinclaire, who is withholding a confession that would exonerate Parks from guilt in the murder of a former partner. The manner in which the rancher tracks down Sinclaire's gang, secures the stolen document, and wins the hand of the girl, supplies the real action of the story.

"The Mouse's Bride"

(Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL TERRY in this release adds another corking good animated to his already large list of successes. The cartoonist has injected into this number, a character in the person of a duck, whose antics bring about much merriment.

Old Farmer Al has considerable trouble in runing his household; the goldfish squawks for a drink, the cat wants his back scrubbed, and the mouse maid, who should, but doesn't attend to these duties, must be watched. The maid is the apple of little Milton's eye, and when he calls on her, Danny Duck the butler, by means of many trick doors about the house manages to catch the pair in more or less compromising situations, for which he collects quite a lot of tips. Danny becomes too inquisitive and gets an eye-full of seltzer through the keyhole. The duck tells Farmer Al, who enlists the aid of the cat to chase the loving mice. Milt and the maid run to the edge of a stream, where Al and the cat fall into the water, as the lovers sail away on the back of a friendly cod.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

"Wild Wool"—"Night Clouds"

(Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT C. BRUCE has netted a great deal of beauty, unusual photography and an achievement—some splendid shots of mountain sheep in this new subject of his Outdoor Sketches series. The shots of the sheep are really fine besides being unusual to a degree. To film these wary creatures who will bound away at the slightest disturbance, Bruce has employed the telescope which enables him to annihilate space and view his subject close up. This close range scrutiny of mountain sheep aloft in their rocky haunts is one of the most unusual things you will encounter in a long and arduous film journey.

In "Night Clouds" you have a typical study of a gloriously tinted sky by a camera artist. Work of this high standard is the despair of the amateur and is but rarely met with in the best turned out by the greater lights of the A. S. C.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Yukon Gold"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by George J. Reddy)

IT seems to be the popular opinion among producers of Western short subjects, that action is what the public wants regardless of the story. This being the case, these featurettes in the Universal-Jack Perrin series are sure to please. As in previous releases this latest offering is plentifully sprinkled with outdoor action, consisting of fast riding and hard fighting.

Bob McKenzie (Jack Perrin), of the Royal Mounted, in an effort to protect a girl, Lora Dene, from pursuing outlaws, is knocked unconscious and the girl is captured. Klondike Larsen, leader of the gang, is also holding Lora's father captive in order to make him divulge the location of his gold mine. The "Mountie" in the meantime recovers from the blow and appears on the scene. A lengthy rough-and-tumble battle follows, during which the girl escapes and rides to the post for help. In the nick of time, aid comes to the out-numbered Bob, and the bandits are finally apprehended. The old man offers Bob a partnership in the mine, and Lora accepts him as a partner for life.

"Good Scout Buster"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by George J. Reddy)

THIS effort of the Buster Brown trio, deserves a little higher rating than other recent releases in this series. Some good comedy situations, nicely put across by the kid players and the talented canine Tige, will make this two-reeler popular with the adult audiences as well as the children.

Fed up on the mischief making of Buster, the youngster's father sends him off to a summer scout camp, to learn discipline. Of course, the dog, Tige, trails along, and at the camp they find Mary Jane, and the rest of the neighborhood gang. It does not take the kids long to cook up plenty of trouble, and throw the whole camp into a scene of uproar and confusion. A wind machine and a trained monkey play important parts in the creating of fun in this piece, and considerable credit also goes to the dog, who performs some good business.

"Sleigh Bells"

(Universal—One Reel)

AVERY funny and cleverly cartooned release, this newest Walter Disney comic, shows Oswald the lucky bunny as a "big time" sportsman at an exclusive mountain winter resort. Disney's unlimited store of originality and humor enables him to give a new slant to his penning of the rabbit in animated toboggan, snow-fight and fancy skating scenes.

Oswald also manages to get mixed up in a hockey game and a scrap, and then attempts to teach a fascinating damsel to ice skate. A balloon attached to the lady, to give her balance, proves unreliable, and she soars skyward. Of course, the ingenious Oswald finds a method to bring the fair maid back to earth.—GEORGE J. REDDY.

The Embassy theatre did only a fair business with "The Lion and The Mouse" and less than contemplated, even though the picture is considered a popular one.

The Coliseum theatre scored a knock-out with "The Smart Set" on the screen and exceptional acts on the stage.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," together with good music, crowded the Alexandria theatre in the evenings.

"The Blue Danube did very well at the Haight theatre as did "Singed" at the Avenue theatre.

Sterns List 11 Comedies for Mid-Summer

Eleven two-reel comedies have been set by the Stern Brothers for mid-summer release. The Sterns' current schedule was hand-picked from the large number of Stern comedies completed and available, it is asserted. The releases carry through July and August and wind up the 1927-28 film season for the Stern product. Definite information concerning the release dates of Stern Brothers Comedies from September on will be announced later. In this connection, it is interesting to note that the Sterns have comedies already in hand for release as far ahead as next April.

The Stern Brothers summer releases include two of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" Comedies, "The Newlyweds' False Alarm," and "The Newlyweds' Anniversary."

The two Newlyweds' Comedies will be released July 3rd and August 2nd, respectively.

Two of the "Keeping Up with the Joneses" also are scheduled. "Reel Life" will be released July 4th, and "McGinis vs. Jones," on August 8th.

Christie Closes for Story Material; Frances Lee Cast

A deal with Jean Arlette, French author, for a group of stories to be adapted for the new series which the Christie studios are producing under the title of "The Confessions of a Chorus Girl" has been closed by Al Christie. The Christie writers, under the direction of Frank R. Conklin, are selecting the story ideas out of the Arlette material and adapting them for the series of two-reelers which will center mainly around the backstage life of a show girl.

Frances Lee, who only two years ago was vaudeville dancing partner for Billy Dooley, has been promoted by the Christies and will be starred in the series in which Billy Engle and Sid Smith will also appear.

Van Beuren.

Albany

CHANGES of interest to exhibitors served out of Albany continue to take place along film row. Gene Lowe, one time booker for Fox in Albany, but who has been engaged in other lines for the last two years, returned this week as booker at the Universal exchange, succeeding C. R. Halligan. Sterling Wilson, who recently came to Albany as a Tiffany salesman, has been made manager, succeeding Pete Dana, who will supervise the Albany-Buffalo territory with headquarters in the latter city. Ben Smith has left the Warner Brothers' sales force to join the Tiffany force, and Isidore Epstein, shipper at the Metro exchange, is slated to take Smith's place at Warner Brothers. Joe Miller, of Buffalo, has severed connections with the Tiffany forces and will handle Buffalo for Columbia.

The children of C. H. Buckley, owner of the Leland and the Clinton Square Theatres in Albany, will leave the fore part of July to spend the summer at camps.

It is understood that Louis Benton, of Ballston Spa, will reopen the Hudson Theatre in Albany, the latter part of July. The house has been closed for several months, following a fire.

The Star, in Schenectady, a residential house, owned and operated by J. M. Myers, closed last week, and will probably remain so until early fall. The Rex, in Middleburg, has been transferred by Mr. Van Buren to Mr. Sullivan.

There was a report around Albany last week to the effect that Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, had sold his houses. There was no confirmation, however, of the sale by the Albany Film Board of Trade.

Mildred Coon, of the Pathe office force, who was badly gored by a cow a week or so ago while on her vacation, is still confined to her bed and may not be able to return to her duties for awhile longer.

Louis Saperstein, manager of the American in Troy, which closed last week to remain so for the summer, is planning to spend his vacation in the mountainous region of New England.

Charles Smakwitz, manager of the Mark Ritz in Albany, appeared on the streets last week behind the wheel of a new car.

Morris Silverman, of Schenectady, plans to take no vacation this year, and gives as his reason the fact that there are too many consolidations under way for him to risk being absent on any long trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts are back in Troy from a motor trip that took them to Niagara Falls and other places.

Although Columbia will open an exchange in Albany, it has not yet been definitely decided where it will be located. There is one unoccupied building along Albany's film row, and it is generally believed that C. R. Halligan, who will represent Columbia in this section, will lease this building.

Lew Fischer, who has several theatres along the border of New York state, was in town last week accompanied by four of his house managers, and spent the time in arranging fall programs.

For the first time in quite a while Louis Schine, one of the heads of the Schine circuit, with headquarters in Gloversville, was along Albany's film row during the past week. C. D. LaPointe, of Chatham, was also in town.

Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose in Troy, has become a regular baseball fan and may be found every afternoon when the game is on at Chadwick Park.

H. L. Mausert, of North Adams, Mass., a brother of Fred Mausert, a well known exhibitor in Glens Falls, has bought a hotel at Greenwich, N. Y., and will remodel the building in order that it may serve as motion picture theatre.

William Donnelly, an operator of Cohoes, is still on the sick list. Al Lemay, operator at the Lincoln Theatre in Troy, has moved into his new home.

Cleveland

OVERSEATING in neighborhood locations is given as the reason for combining two local competitive motion picture theatres, and operating them as one unit. The houses are the Plaza, East 152nd St. near St. Clair Ave., which belonged to the Washington circuit, and the Five Points, St. Clair Ave. at East 152nd St., which belonged to the Ohio Amusement Company.

Phil Gleichman of the Ohio Amusement Company, and M. B. Horwitz of the Washington circuit, have formed the United Theatres Corporation to operate these two theatres in an effort to put them on a paying basis. They claim that business has fallen off due to overseating in the neighborhood. Two theatres have been built in the vicinity of the Five Points and the Plaza within the past year, and a third is now under construction. Operating in opposition to one other resulted in financial loss to both. Operating under the same banner, they can be made profitable, say Gleichman and Horwitz, by closing one of the houses for five days a week, diverting all the business during the week to one house and cutting down overhead.

It is stated that other neighborhoods suffering likewise from overseating, will be similarly treated.

Inquiries and Comments

A New Era for the Projectionist

A NEW era faces the Projection Craft, and, for that matter, the entire motion picture industry. For the projectionist it will mean an era of intellectual accomplishments requiring strenuous efforts on his part to keep pace with the profusion of changes about to be wrought in the entire motion picture industry.

After several years of experimentation and jockeying for position, synchronized pictures have, overnight, burst full upon the industry and at this moment a scramble is in progress among producers and exhibitors to find their respective places in the new sun which has risen.

A no less revolutionary change now confronts the projection craft. It involves the use of equipment hitherto entirely unknown to all except a few chosen projectionists especially trained in its handling, principally for the purpose of producing road shows.

Equipment which is far more delicate and replete with the scientific "Gadgets" which projectionists in general have shunned as being "too technical" to warrant it serious study.

A Technical Era

The era which faces projectionists today is a scientific one—or, to use a word despised by nearly all projectionists, it is a "technical" one. For the past six or seven years frequent changes in projection practice have introduced more and yet more technical features and the equipment has become even more complicatd. Be it said to the credit of the projectionist, however, that he has assimilated these changes in a most commendable manner and as far as concerns the actual handling of this new equipment, has shown that he is able to digest, and then, apply, operating instructions quickly and thoroughly.

The changes which have occurred in projection methods during the past six years or so have all had to do with various forms of light projectors in which the fundamental principles involved have been more or less familiar to the projectionist. Such changes are more easily grasped as they constitute extensions of generally understood principles with which the men have long been in contact.

Synchronized pictures, however, involve the use of equipment which, until recently, has been entirely dissociated from picture projection so that it is, for the most part, completely foreign to the projectionist.

The nature of this equipment is such as to require far greater precision in its manipulation than has been necessary in straight picture projection. Unlike motion picture projection, which can be accomplished by mechanical routine and with but little understanding of the technical principles, synchronized pictures call for a high degree of skill and a complete understanding of the electrical, optical and acoustical aspects of the equipment.

No slipshod methods can be tolerated here and a further avoidance of those things which smack of the technical can no longer be made.

Ever since the birth of the motion picture, projectionists have strongly resisted "high-brow technicalities" and have compelled all educational efforts and literature on the subject to be couched in words of one syllable for fear that the remarks would not be understood by the readers.

The technical articles which have appeared for years in this department have often been criticized by other writers and projectionists as being "too technical" for their complete comprehension. In order to educate the projectionist, we were told over and over again, it was necessary to "talk to him in his own language." These writers little realized that by continuing to talk to the projectionist in "his own language" they were but prolonging his state of ignorance and were only delaying the day of judgment. The day of judgment has now arrived and we find these same writers now scurrying around—with the projectionists—in an effort to learn the "technicalities" which they formerly despised so heartily.

Engineer Language

No longer will the projectionist be talked to in "his own language" for the very simple reason that it is impossible to reduce the vocabulary of science to the limited vocabulary of the average projectionist and still have the projectionist know what it is all about. He will be talked to now in the language of the engineer and scientist—or he will remain forever ignorant of the workings of the synchronized picture.

To the exhibitor, synchronized pictures means merely a change in practice and an expenditure of money. To the projectionist they mean a broad widening of his intellectual horizon. It is his golden opportunity to make his services really valuable, unreplaceable by unskilled persons. It will establish him more solidly and will make him less dependent upon the union for protection because he will be doing highly skilled work which is beyond the capacities of an unskilled person.

By the same token, it will mean a fatter pay envelope and more jobs to be filled.

All in all, synchronized pictures will be a boon to the projection craft—providing, always providing, the projectionist settles down to some serious work and brushes aside the mental cobwebs.

Picture writing as a means for educating the projectionist henceforth will be out.

At the International Convention in Detroit during the early part of this month it was voted that the I. A. would stand pat on the demand that only union men be used in the projection room for the showing of synchronized pictures. The fear was expressed that college trained engineers would displace projectionists because of the high order of skill required for the work.

The I. A.'s decision will at least assure the projectionist of a chance to show what he can do with this new equipment. Trained union men, experts in the handling of synchronous apparatus, will endeavor to teach the rank and file in their new duties and will give them practical instructions in the handling of the equipment.

Beyond that, nothing more can be done and it will be up to the individual projectionists to apply themselves seriously to this new work if they expect to continue to hold down their jobs.

To quote a popular phrase, of the day "There is a new band wagon in motion pictures"—and it behooves every projectionist to speedily find a seat on this band wagon and then stay there.

Toronto Operators Get Holidays With Pay

Holidays with pay is the special concession which has been granted to moving picture operators by prominent theatre interests of Toronto, Ontario, according to the formal announcement of W. J. Covert of Toronto, International President of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators Union.

The 42 qualified operators employed in the Toronto theatres of Famous Players Canadian Corp., will all receive a vacation of one week with full time pay during the present season. The same privilege has also been granted the projectionists of Loew's Theatre, Toronto, by Manager Jules Bernstein; the Madison Theatre, owned by J. C. Brady, president of the Ontario Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association; the Park Theatre, directed by Harry Alexander, vice-president of the Ontario M. P. T. O., and a number of other houses.

Mr. Covert announced that these theatres recognize the union and meet union conditions but have also provided an annual holiday of one week for the men without loss of remuneration.

Unique St. Louis House

Operates in Union Station for Benefit of Travelers With Time to Wait Between Trains

PERHAPS the most unusual motion picture theatre in the world is operated in the St. Louis Union Station for the benefit of travelers passing through the St. Louis gateway to the West, Southwest and Northwest. Every day persons from all quarters of the globe sit for an hour or two watching current motion pictures while waiting for train connections.

On one side of the small theatre which occupies a part of the second floor of the big union station is a huge clock that can be seen conveniently from any part of the house. Trains are never missed by patrons of the house as the management sees that each person attending the show is informed of the exact moment his or her train will pull out.

Billy Miller established the theatre on March 10, 1922, and in the six years the house has been opened it has played to almost a half million patrons. The theatre has gained an international reputation and many patrons are of the repeater type. Persons who often pass through the St. Louis gateway always attend the movie shows between trains.

Miller has also found that travelers from California, Florida, Maine, Mexico and Canada have asked for the theatre on their arrival at the station, having been told of the picture show by others who enjoyed it. About half of the audiences are men, but it is the mother with a brood of restless children that has found the theatre the greatest boon. A lively comedy of a Western thriller is just the prescription to keep the kiddies quiet between trains. Some mothers have even checked children in the theatre while doing a bit of shopping in St. Louis.

Only a Gold Seal can give the Gold Seal kind of perfect performance. When you invest your money in a ticket register, you are entitled to that sort of service. Why not buy a Gold Seal and be certain of it? There is no other register that is "just as good" as a Gold Seal, because no other is built the same way. The Gold Seal gives long, trouble-free service, because service is built into every part. Play safe—specify Gold Seal.

Peppy breezes in your lobby to greet people coming in—

Gentle breezes--cool and refreshing--inside your house—

That's the way to pull big business all summer—every summer.

It isn't the breeze alone that makes Typhoon a winner. It's the tremendous volume of pure, fresh air from outdoors—a complete change once every minute—that gets rid of the enormous amount of heat and humidity given off by the audience. You know wall fans won't cool your house—nor will anything else that gives you just a breeze.

The one-minute air change—AND the breeze besides: That's what does the trick.

Quick action—NOW . Get our Booklet N-5

Hollywood—Continued

Alvarado Signed

Alan Crosland has signed Don Alvarado for the leading male role in "The Scarlet Woman," which the director is making at present with Lya de Putti as the star.

This is a picturization of Bess Meredyth's story of the Russian revolution. Crosland selected Alvarado without hesitancy for the role after seeing "Drums of Love," in which the actor scored emphatically.

Tay Garnett Entertains

Tay Garnett, DeMille's new director, entertained a number of trade paper and newspaper representatives on the "Celebrity" set last Wednesday, where luncheon was served, with Lina Basquette as hostess. It was the final day of shooting of Garnett's first picture for Pathe.

Charley Grapewin

Charley Grapewin, still basking in fame acquired by his well remembered characterization in "The Awakening of Mr. Pipp," has made a motion picture adaptation of the celebrated farce. With the advent of talking pictures, it is not unlikely that Grapewin will himself appear in the title role of his famous stage play. Meantime, Grapewin is negotiating the sale of his original story "Muddy Waters," recently completed.

At Hal Roach's

Signed for Charley Chase's supporting cast in his next Hal Roach comedy are: Ed Kennedy, Ruby Blaine, Marion Byron and Gordon Elliott. They are working under the direction of Hal Yates. . . . Robert F. McGowan is supervising a new "Our Gang" comedy, which Anthony Mack is directing. . . ." "Do Gentlemen Snore" is the choice title designated for the latest Roach comedy. Included in the cast of this number are Max Davidson, Dorothy Coburn, Spec O'Donnell, Gene Morgan and May Wallace. Arch Heath directed. . . . Marion Byron, a new comedienne just signed by Hal Roach, will make her debut under the Roach insignia in the next Charley Chase starring vehicle.

Educational Players

Comedians and comediennes who will appear in the 26 Cameo comedies on Educational's new program have been signed by Educational. Included in the bunch are: Monty Collins, who will be supported by Ruby McCoy; Glen Cavender, Al Thompson, Eva Thatcher, Marty Martin, Henry Murdock and Lucille Hutton.

Finishes Story

Hal Conklin is back in harness and recently completed a story for production at DeMille Studios, "The Flying Fool," which is scheduled as a William Boyd special. It will be directed by Tay Garnett.

Another "Stella Dallas"?

Paul Kohner, youthful Universal executive to whose supervision "The Braggart," to star Jean Hersholt, has been entrusted, is making an effort to sign Belle Bennett to play opposite Hersholt. This star and Miss Bennett achieved distinction for their highly praised work in "Stella Dallas" and Kohner believes the public would like to see them together again.

Dix in Injun Role

Richard Dix is soon to play an Indian in the Paramount production, "Redskin," the next picture on his schedule. Public demand for a companion picture to his successful "Vanishing American," resulted in the selection of "Red Skin."
